Lillehammer Ready to Greet the World

tional Herald Tribune LILLEHAMMER, Norway - The ground is whiter than the clouds. This town's 23,000 residents walk, crunching upon it, with a sense of pride equal to their relief. Their reputations have been saved. When the International Olympic Committee awarded the 17th. Winter Olympic Games to this central Norwegian town in 1988, its members had in mind the postcard image of streets coated in peaceful, ilencing snow. For the five winters thereafter, it hardly snowed. The hosts could have manufactured snow for Alberto Tomba and the other skiers, but that would have been like serving take-out pizza to an honored guest.

For five years, Lillehammer made good on every risk. Old roads were torn up and new ones laid. New buildings went up across the valley. Construction can be wearying, especially for people who live in small town in order to avoid just that.

Representatives of the majority who never believed the Olympics would come were now wresting over the ambiputed windfall. Some 51.05 billion was speat. The repress, once planned to the host city, were spread out to Hamar and Govik, either towns in

What It Took to Bring U.S. and Allies Together NATO Credibility Gap and the Plight Of UN Troops Finally Tipped Balance

BONN - What makes the latest NATO hreat to bomb Serbian artillery positions round Sarajevo different from earlier threats by the allies to use air strikes to stop the cruel iege of the city?

This time, the United States and its allies learly understand the threat the same way, and or the first time both now seem ready to make ood on the threat if the Serbs disregard it. "NATO has finally made a credible threat to se bombs to stop the violence in Sarajevo." an official in Chancellor Helmut Kohl's office bere aid, a remark that spoke volumes about earlier ones and about the shift that has taken place on outh sides of the Atlantic about the need for U.S. involvement.

In May, France, Britain and most of the other European allies rebuffed an American olan to use air strikes against Serbian military argets and lift the weapons embargo for the Sosnian Muslims, who were suffering the most rom the war there.

But the fighting went on, and in August the allies came around to issuing a threat to use air cower if attacks against civilians continued. low, they say, they really mean it.

What brought them to this point, European d American officials say, were two things, The Europeans were sick and tired of keepng thousands of peacekeeping troops with United Nations forces in Bosnia-Herzegovina daily atrocities, trying to get food and medicine through to civilians trapped, like them, in a war hat mone of the combatants yet wanted to end. And both Europeans and Americans were aware that letting the Serbs go unpunished for gnoring earlier threats could have fatal conse-quences for the credibility of an alliance that hey all still believe is the best security framework to ensure a safe transition from Cold War o cooperation with the new democracies to

The shift in the European attitude began with the two meetings of NATO ambassadors in Brussels on Aug. 2 and 9, when the United States convinced its allies that threatening the Serbs with action might have some effect on the battlefield. words were not enough, as Mr. Clinton told other NATO leaders at the alliance summi meeting in Brussels Jan. 10-11.

It was then, according to senior German officials, that the British and French, who together provide about 10,000 of the troops in the UN protection force in Bosnia, indicated seriously that they were beginning to conclude that the mission was a mockery and that it was pointless to continue, unless something drastic happened to change things.

The French had insisted on raising the issue of Bosnia at the summit talks, and for several weeks afterward tried unsuccessfully to get the United States to put pressure on the Bosnian Muslims to agree to a peace settlement splitting their country up with the Serbs and Croats. For a while, some American officials suspected that what the French were really trying to do was to find a way of blaming the United States if they

Bosnia Truce Takes Hold, But the Serbs Give Warning

They Threaten to Hold Aid Workers if NATO Launches Air Attacks

Compiled by Our Staff From Oispatches SARAJEVO. Bosnia-Herzegovina — The guns surrounding Sarajevo fell silent Thursday as a cease-fire took hold under the threat of NATO air strikes, but Bosnian Serbian officials warned that air attacks on their positions would spark retaliation. Bosnian Serbian generals also threatened to hold foreign aid workers against their will in case of air strikes. "If representatives of their countries bomb us, they will remain with us," General Milan Gvero said.

General Gyero made the comments as reports surfaced of aid workers being withdrawn and indications that Serbs were preventing some from leaving.

But the Serbian forces allowed United Nations peacekeeping troops to move into six frontline zones of Sarajevo on Thursday as part of a plan to lift the siege.

Six French army mechanized platoons with 40 soldiers each and armed with 90mm cannons were deployed, and at least two more positions were to be put under UN supervision on Friday, a UN spokesman said.

Comments from General Gvero and another top general continued a line of tough talk from Bosnian Serbs after the North Atlantic Treaty Organization issued an ultimatum for them to remove their heavy weapons from around Sarajevo within 10 days or face air strikes.

General Gyero, along with General Manoilo Milovanovic, also east doubts on a verbal agreement reached Wednesday in Sarajevo to put their heavy weapons under UN control.

The Serbian artillery would not move unilaterally, General Gvero said.

"We want peace, and we are for relocation, but we cannot leave our people without de-fense." General Gyero said. "In other words, if we move our artillery a kilometer, the Muslims will have to do the same."

The Muslim-led government has far fewer pieces of heavy weapons and little place to move them in besieged Sarajevo.

But for the moment, the gups around the Bosnian capital were paiet, in Sarajero children made their way out of shell-scarred buildings and ventured onto streets and playgrounds near the front lines.

A mood of exhilaration broke out at times during the sudden return, however fragile, of humanity to the devastated city. Children living in exposed apartments along "sniper alley" said it was the first time they had played outside in almost two years.

After months of death and disappointment over failed truce efforts and peace negotiations, many people in Sarajevo permitted themselves a ray of hope. But dozens of previous truces bave collapsed during Bosnia's war, and many residents remained wary.

The new UN commander for Bosnia, Lieutenant General Sir Michael Rose of Britain. said this truce was different because the Serbs were under greater international pressure and had agreed to pull back their heavy weapons.

As the French units moved into position, soldiers with a tank and six armored cars took over the Bratstvo-Jedinstvo Bridge facing the Serbian-held Grbavica suburb.

Later, General Rose crossed the bridge and stopped amid wrecked cars, trenches and mine fields on the Serbian side to talk to reporters. Serbian civilians, separated from the rest of Sarajevo by 22 months of war, watched from

Crédit Lyonnais Figures in Swiss Judicial Inquiry

By Alan Friedman International Revold Tribune

PARIS - Credit Lyonnais, the giant statecontrolled bank that has been chosen for privatization, became entangled in fresh controversy Thursday as its former chairman and a top executive were placed under investigation in connection with the bankruptcy of a Swiss company involved in the takeover of MGM, the Hollywood studio.

Bosnia Accepts Serb Demand For Inquiry in Sarajevo Attack

GENEVA - The Muslim-led Bosnian government gave in here on Thursday to a Bosnian Serb demand for the establishment of a United Nations commission to investigate who was responsible for firing the mortar shell that killed 68 people in a Sarajevo marketplace ast Saturday.

The agreement on a commission allowed the Bosnian peace talks to resume under the pressure of a NATO uitimatum issued Wednesday to the Serbs to withdraw their heavy weapons from around Sarajevo before Feb. 21 or face air strikes.

The two international mediators. Lord Owen and Thorvald Stolten-berg, indicated that they hoped to make use of the urgency created by the ultimatum to push for a separate agreement to place the city under UN administration immediately and have it demilitarized.

But after a day of talks here, the Bosnian Serh lender. Radovan Karadzic, said the Mu-lim-led Bosnian government had rejected negotiations on such a partial accord. "They do not accept a solution for Sarajevo before an overall solution, and that is the result of NATO involvement," he said. There was no immediate Bosnian government reaction to Mr. Karadzic's assertions, but the government is known to be opposed to the complete demilitarization of its forces in Sarajevo. The Bosnian delegation had vehemently opposed the Serh de-mand, saying there was no need for "some silly commission" and asserting that the Serbs were "just trying to hay time."

The talks appeared headed for yet another deadlock on Thursday morning after Mr. Karadzic refused to participate in their resumption unless an international inquiry of the Sarajevo killings was undertaken. He also refused to answer questions about whether he intended to meet the terms of the NATO ultimatum

A Russian deputy foreign minister, Vitali Churkin, also said the Bosnian Serbs were committed to carry out their commitments to General Rose while raising questions about the implementation of the NATO ultimatum.

"It is going to be the United Nations or NATO?" he asked. "In our view, it must be the United Nations. It must be the Security

Even before the ultimatum, Lord Owen and Mr. Stoltenberg had been working on a plan to reach a separate accord among the three warring Bosnian factions to place the Sarajevo region immediately under UN administration and proceed with its demilitarization.

Last Sunday, they met with Mr. Karadzic for five hours in Zvornick, a town straddling the Serbian-Bosnian border, and got his agreement to negotiate on a separate Sarajevo agreement. On Thursday, Lord Owen called it their "Sarajevo first policy."

The two mediators had hoped to reach an agreement in Geneva. possibly this week, based on the progress already achieved in earlier talks about the status of Sarajevo. The Bosnian Serbs have given up their demand that the city be divided into two cities and both sides have given their assent in principle to put Sarajevo under UN adminis tration for a two-year period.

But the Bosnian government, after first agreeing to the demilitarization of the Sarajevo district last fall, is now having second thoughts.

Fewer Air Delays in Europe in '93

BRUSSELS (Reuters) - European airlines suffered fewer delays last

BRUSSELS (Reuters) — European airlines suffered fewer delays last year, but at a great cost to themselves to improve air traffic controls, the Association of European Airlines said Thursday.

The Brussels-based organization of 24 scheduled European airlines said only 12.6 per cent of departures within Europe were delayed by more than 15 minutes in 1993 compared to 16.6 per cent in 1992.

But the association said the improvement only came at a cost of around 5600 million from 1991 to 1993. It said this underlined the need to find a single air-traffic control system for Europe to replace the present panels work of different systems.

New Therapy Offers Hope to Millions

Of Ulcer Sufferers

By Lawrence K. Altman New York Times Service

BETHESDA, Maryland - Setting a new standard of care for millions of people with stomach ulcers, a panel of medical experts say that antimicrobial agents, in-cluding antibiotics, should be added to the conventional treatments for the common ailment. The recommendation reflects evidence from studies in the last few years that ulcers are caused by infection with a bacterium, Helicobacterium pylori. The goal of antimicrobial therapy is to knock out the bacteria permanently and thus to prevent recurrences.

The recommendation was made Wednesday by an independent panel convened by the National Institutes of Health, a federal agency in Bethesda, as part of a pro-gram intended to resolve controversies in health care.

The chairman of the panel, Dr. Tadataka Yamada, who heads the department of medicine at the University of Michigan in Ann Arbor, said he believed his was the first professional group to officially recommend anti-microbial drugs for nosed this year, but also to the more than 4 million Americans now being treated for ulcers.

There are two types of ulcers. The most common is duodenal, which occurs in the portion of the bowel connecting the stomach and small intestine. The other is gastric, and occurs in the stomach.

Dr. Yamada estimated that doctors now prescribed anti-microbial drugs for "no more than 1 to 2 percent, if that, of ulcer patients" in the United States. The small number may reflect what had been a continuing uncertainty over the effectiveness of anti-microbials for

The addition of anti-microbial therapy offers ulcer patients the promise of a full cure with one course of drug therapy. It also of-fers the possibility of fewer compli-cations, like bleeding and blockage of the intestine from swelling and inflammation.

"We now have an opportunity to cure a disease that previously we had only been able to suppress or control, and sometimes not all successfully," said Dr. Ann L. B. Wiltreatment of ulcers.

The panel's recommendation applies not only to the 400,000 new liams of George Washington University Medical Center in Washington, a panel member,

* POLITICAL NOTES*

A Nove to Protect the Poor and Minorities

WASHINGTON - The Clinton administration is about to order all federal agencies to ensure that their programs do not unfairly inflict environmental harm on the poor and members of minorities.

An executive order to be signed within days by President Bill Clinton would require every agency to come up with a comprehen-sive strategy to redress and prevent such inequities, which until recently were rarely considered in setting federal policies.

The order would govern programs as diverse as the removal of lead from public housing, pollution control in urban rivers, the licensing of hazardous-waste incinerators, the exposure of farm workers to pesticides and the setting of health standards for contaminants found in game and fish.

In planning federal programs, enforcing pollution laws and writ-ing regulations, agencies will have to make sure that all segments of the population have equal opportunities to make their views known

Among the programs that would be affected is the Superfund, which helps pay for the cleanup of toxic-waste sites, many of which are in depressed urban areas populated mainly by racial minorities. Under the order, the Superfund program would have to correct disparities in the pace of cleaning up those sites.

On Gun Control, the Numbers Don't Add Up

WASHINGTON -- Only 17 percent of U.S. criminal records are in shape to be of use in making background checks of gun purchasers, according to Attorney General Janet Reno.

Background checks will be required starting Feb. 28, when a new handgun-control law goes into effect.

In a speech to a meeting of the Bureau of Justice Statistics, Ms. Reno said the latest data, in 1992, showed that 17.5 million of the 53.3 million criminal histories are sharable nationally by computer. And only 9.2 million of all records are complete, she said. (AP)

Bonn Lifts Order On Expulsion of Croatia Refugees

New York Times Service

BONN - The German authorities have lifted a blanket expulsion order that would have sent 100,000 refugees from the war in the Balkans back to Croatia by the end of April, officials said Thursday.

According to a new accord between the interior ministers of the 16 German states and the federal government in Bonn, only refugees from Crostian territory deemed by German authorities to be "pacified" will have to go back this year. Those from the one-third of Croatian territory occupied by Serbs who want annexation with Serbia, and refugees judged to be hardship cases, had their permission to stay here extended until June 30, 1995. German authorities had decided in mid-1993 that people from Croatia no longer qualified as refugees. But human-rights groups and ex-ile organizations say that ethnic cleansing had left a third of Croatian territory ruined and in Serbian hands, and made unthinkable a forced return of refugees-

But both French and German officials were strongly impressed by Mr. Clinton's endorsement at the summit talks of European efforts to build a separate defense identity within the North Atlantic Treaty Organization.

In the end, the French appear to have accepted the idea that the En-ropean Union could not deal with the Bosnian problem alone, and that they could work together with their American allies to use NATO everage on it.

ALLIES:

Coming Together

It was a French-American proposal that carried the day in Brussels on Wednesday. What tipped the balance was the killing of 68 people by a mortar shell fired at a Sarajevo market over the weekend, and the pictures that revived public revolsion in Europe over the confinuing barbarity on its eastern doorstep.

It still took the allies 14 hours to agree to the proposal, and clearly most of them hope that they do not ever have to drop a single bomb. If the Serbs comply with the NATO ultimatum and withdraw their guns 20 kilometers (12 miles) from Sara-jevo within the 10-day limit, and no further shots are fired into the city, the allies may not have to act.

If they do, European officials say, they may yet regret it. Bombing could be the first step in a long and ever-widening chain of direct involvement in the war, and Britain and Canada, in particular, fear the possibility of resaliation against the

Afrikaner Group Sets Boycott South Africa Warned of Campaign Violence

By Paul Taylor thingson Post Service

JOHANNESBURG - The Afrikaner Volksfront, an umbrella group of rightists seeking an inde-pendent white homeland, announced Thursday that it would not participate in South Africa's first all-races election and warned that the campaign will be riddled with violence.

President Frederik W. de Klerk said he was disappointed with the announcement, but added, "We cannot allow a minority to stop the

In the last week, the government and the African National Congress had offered the Volksfront and two other holdout parties, the black homeland government of Bophuthatswana and the Zuhi-based Inkatha Freedom Party, a two-ballot system, regional taxation powers and a constitutional commitment to explore ways to accommodate nothing tangible for an increasingly restless public. Israeli officials acknowledged that many substantive issues remained, but they said they had overcome the most difficult securidisputes and had shown that they and the Palestinians could move forward. "I believe certain walls of suspi-

Mr. Rabin called the agreement "an important step forward," praise echoed by President Bill Clinton, who said it represented another big milestone."

Palestinian leaders were more reserved no doubt because Mr. Arafat had backed down on key matters like Israel's demand for veto power over travelers trying to cross from Jordan and Egypt into the territories.

Although Israel will share authority at border passages with the PLO. Israel is clearly the senior partner under the Cairo accord and will be able to stop Palestinians it considers suspicious and turn away Bank or Gaza Strip resident. That includes Palestinian refugees, Mr.

But Mr. Arafat, who was looking for symbols of authority in the ter-ritories, could claim victory with the right to post armed Palestinian police officers and fly the Palestinian flag at border terminals.

These were tough negotiations and we didn't get everything we wanted," Nabil Shaath, a senior PLO negotiator, said in Cairo. "But then neither did the Israelis."

As Israeli officials describe the talks, they involved weighing Israel's oeed for security assurances against the Palestinians desire to demonstrate they are in charge of their own lives. The officials insisted that they held firm on security, but made concessions to the Palestinians when that was not at issue.

We want them to demonstrate their ability to cootrol what's going on, which is the basis of this whole agreement," said Environment Minister Yossi Sarid, a negotiator in Cairo. "If it turns out that this agreement relies on a weak reed, we haven't achieved anything."

Still to be settled are key details about the Palestinian police force and its relationship with the Israeli army. Among the unanswered questions: Can the army, in hot pursuit of a Palestinian suspected of killing a settler, chase him into a Gaza refusee camp? Or must it turn the job over to the Palestinian police, even though many Israelis issume that the hunt would stop?

On the economic front, customs recedures and Palestinian access to overseas markets have yet to be

General While Israel remains responsible during the interim period for external security, inelnding along the Egyptian border and the Jordanian line, border crossing shall take ace according to the arrangements included in this article

The two sides are determined to do their utmost to maintain the dignity of persons passing through the border crossings. To this end, the mechanism created will rely heavily on brief and modern procedures.

In each border crossing there will be one terminal, consisting of two wings. The first wing will serve Palestinian residents of the Gaza Strip and West Bank and visitors to these areas (bereinafter 'the Palestinian wing'). The second wing will serve Israelis and others (hereinafter 'the Israeli wing'). There will be a closed Israeli checking area and a closed Palestinian checking area.

Special arrangements will apply to V.I.P.s crossing through the Palestinian wing. Palestinian policemen present at the termi-nal will be armed with handgoms. Their deployment will be decided upon in Taba.

3. Arrangements for Entry from Egypt and Jordan Through the Palestinian Wing. a. At the entrance to the Palestinian wing there will be a Palestinian policeman and a raised Palestinian flag.

A T a moment when American critics are suffering loss of jobs, high crime, financial insolvency and physical deterioration, there are, naturally enough, many books on the subject of our worsening urban condition. A few — pitifully few — deal with solutions; most deal with the problems that beset central cities and the people who live in them, and most view the city from the perspective of the social

"A Scientist in the City," which might have been titled more accurately if less auractively, "A Physicist in the City," takes a different course. James Trefil, a professor of physics at George Mason University and the author of several popu-lar books, including "The Dictio-nary of Cultural Literacy" and "Science Matters," examines the natural forces that have shaped the city and, in the process, reminds us that while the metropolis is manmade, it is also a part of the natural world.

"Suburban sprawl," "concrete jungle" and "air-conditioned mightmare" — the last, Henry Miller's phrase — conjure up popular images. Since Thomas Jefferson, Americans have commated town and country, but Trefil rather describes the city itself as an econstem "When a city is born," he system. "When a city is born," he writes, "a new kind of ecosystem is created, one that operates according to the same principles as any other and comes equipped with its own suite of ecological niches." Specialized urban niches house animal life such as pigeons, descendants of the rock doves that were documented as moving into London in the 14th century and that were brought to America by early colomists as a potential food source. Sea gulls and falcous both adapted to life in the city and, today, in some cities, Canada gress are becoming a permanent fixture. When central hearing became widespread, the cackroach, a tropical scavenger insect, became an urban dweller; rats too found a welcoming niche.

Trefil raises the intriguing question of what effect magnetic levitation, or magley, trains will have on urban growth. A Deadline in Bosnia

Get Serious or Shut Up

There is talk radio and there is, especially in respect to Bosnia, talk policy: an interminable ventilation of alarms and alibis, contingencies and conditions, threats and delays, pledges and backdowns, all of which end up with new heaps of Bosnian dead and deep sighs by the United States, its friends in the United Nations and its allies in NATO. This has become the predictable pattern of the 22-month Bosnian war. The instant question is whether the shock generated by the most recent Serbian atrocity in Sarajevo will break this ignoble mold.

True, there is a new spate of diplomatic heavy hreathing. In the latest episode of a Ping Pong game that began in 1992, President Bill Clinton has endorsed a United Nations call on NATO to "prepare" (whatever that means) for bombing Serbian heavy weapons around Sarajevo. On Wednesday, NATO, which last August had pledged to strike if the Serbs did not end their strangulation of the city, set a 10-day deadline for the Serbs to comply or face strikes. Also on Wednesday, the Serbs agreed to pull back their siege guns from Sarajevo and to park them, with the Bosnian government's guns, under UN watch. The Serbs did not sign anything, but that is of small consequence since their word is worthless.

It is American credibility that concerns us

A Momentous Step

Bosnian Serb forces are taking the latest NATO bombing ultimatum seriously, and Americans should, too. The Clinton administration needs to assert more effective U.S. leadership within NATO than it has until now on the Bosnian issue; otherwise this emotionally satisfying riposte to last Saturday afternoon's carnage in Sarajevo could lead to costly and frustrating NATO ground involvement. It could also perversely encourage coercion of the Bosnian government to accept an unjust

European peace formula. In a momentous step, the Western military alliance, which has never before taken any combat action, declared on Wednesday that Bosnian Serb forces must withdraw their heavy guns to a line 20 kilometers outside Sarajevo by Feb. 20 or risk aerial attack by NATO jets. Formally, it will be up to United Nations Secretary-General Butros Butros Ghali to order the first strike.

Even before the alliance voted in Brussels. Serbian forces agreed to a cease-fire and offered to put their siege artillery under UN control. If the Serbs keep their word this time, the ultimatum will be judged a great success. But, as President Bill Clinton himself recognizes, NATO cannot afford to make any more empty threats. If the Serbs do not comply with the terms of the ultimatum, it will be under tremendous pressure to carry out its bombing threat. Bombing Serbian artillery positions is likely to poison Western relations with Mos-cow, which favors the Serbs, and provoke anti-NATO sentiment in pro-Serbian Greece, would end or even slow the Bosnian war. The Bosnian government's much smaller number of heavy guns must also be turned most. How disappointing to observe that William Perry, who has been secretary of defense only a few days, is already picking up the Clinton administration's dilatory Bosnia style. The press's emphasis on air strikes, he told reporters, was "entirely inappropriate," and he volunteered a primer on the downside of such a tactic. How can it be that the Pentagon needs to be reminded that there is an unside as well as a downside and that its task is to find the best way to support the president, who repeating his warmess of empty threats - insists that he now truly means to act? Smart policy requires, of course, not a mindless NATO whack, as emotionally satisfying as that might hriefly be. It requires political thinking to link military acts to a negotiated peace. Conceivably, the United States is finally getting into this part of the act. It is not just hanging back and saying "no" to the Europeans' idea of an imposed peace that would leave the Muslims with an unviable enclave. It is coming forward to promote its own idea to give them something a face-saving bit bigger, better and more voluntary. At least we hope that this is what the American government is doing. At this point in the dying of Bosnia, more talk policy is an obscenity. If the U.S. government is not conducting a serious policy, it should just shut up.

over to UN monitors under the ultimatum. If its forces try to exploit the neutralizing of the Serbs' artillery advantage to push back the front lines around Sarajevo, European gov-ernments would feel obliged to find a way to restrain the Bosnians.

Europe is already anxious about Bosnia's improving ability to defend itself, and wants to enlist U.S. diplomatic pressure on Bosnia to accept the partition maps drawn up by David Owen and his UN counterpart, Thorvald Stoltenberg. Washington has until now sympathized with Bosnian government claims that those mans deny it the territorial integrity and transit corridors it needs to survive.

Meanwhile the Serbs, if thwarted in Sarajevo, can be expected to shift their efforts to another front, or to vent their fury against the 13,000 UN peacekeepers stationed in Bosnia. That would raise new cries for air strikes, and even ground relief operations, to vindicate NATO's credibility. Having issued the ultimatum, NATO should not now step back. But it is up to the Clinton administration to make clear that this is a humanitarian action that does not commit the United States to deeper involvement in European diplomatic maneuvers or ground peacekeeping operations. That will limit some of the risks now undertaken.

The surest way out for the long term is to assign the job of defending Bosnian civilians where it belongs, to the Bosnian government. That will require an energetic U.S. diplomatic campaign to lift the UN arms embargo that has given the Serbs their advantage in heavy weapoury. Bosnia is not a ward of NATO or state. The best thing the world can do for it is to get out of the way and let it defend itself.

- THE NEW YORK TIMES.

If the Serbs Retaliate, Harsh Escalation Should Follow

WASHINGTON — Whenever the West pretended to be ready to bomb the Serbian artillery shelling Sarajevo, the Serbs would pretend to agree to stop the slaughter. Then the West didn't bomb and the Serbs didn't stop. This time had better be different. Public opinion is finally beginning to put political heat on feedless leaders.

The revulsion at spinelessness in Europe and leaderlessness in America caused an unannounced deal to be cut between France, which has the most troops in Bosnia, and the United States, which, if not acting like a superpower, can at least be a superbroker.

France undertook to get the British, Canadians and Greeks to go along with token NATO air strikes if the Serbs failed to pull back their artillery. The United States agreed to "encourage" Bosnian Muslims to accept modification of the humiliating deal offered by the Serbs and Croats.

A troubling aspect of this Clinton policy is his choice of envoy to the allies - Undersecretary of State Peter Tarnoff, architect of the notorious Tarnoff Doctrine: America is too poor to get involved.

Is the Western threat to bomb Serbian By William Safire

artillery and mortars still a pretense? Apparently not; a White House aide says that any artillery piece spotted within a specified dis-tance from Sarajevo next week will be target-ed, and any long-range piece outside that line that fires at the city will also be blasted.

But what will happen, worry the hand-wringers, if the Serbs double-cross us again and do not back off? What if they respond to and do not back our wast it they respond to coercion by attacking the peacekeeping troops — won't we be drawn into a quagmire?

That was the question that paralyzed Western action for two long years. We listened to the hand-wringers and it cost 200,000 lives.

NATO delited until its credibility was shartened and the different was brought to the tered and the alliance was brought to the brink of disintegration. Dithering has had its bloody day; now give intervention a chance. The step after next should be no secret: If the Serbs retaliate, harsh escalation must follow. If the troops under UN command cannot defend themselves as a fighting force, they should be withdrawn, turning over their equipment to the Bosnians. No hostages.

Western force would take out aggressor bridges, supply depots, port facilities. If countrywide tactical air support does not belp Bosnian forces turn the tide, smart bombs will find unmanned targets and out will go the lights in Belgrade. will go the lights in Belgrade.

Peace in the Balkans will come not when the Muslims agree to be good victims, nor when Christians and Muslims "make up their own mind to quit killing each other," in Bill Clinton's phrase, but when a good of European balance of power is achieved.

Today's war-causing imbalance can be shifted by air power in close support of Bosnian forces no longer hindered by an arms embargo, and with the political effect of economic privation visited on those in Serbia calling the shots in Bosnia.

But this extended escalation need not take place. As soon as NATO's will to use its power is exhibited dramatically, or as soon as Serbian commanders begin hearing anguished demands from their real headquarters, the peace table will become the scene of great progress. And the primary peacekeepers must be tripartite teams of the former enemies. As the American end of the French-American deal to demonstrate NATO backbone, a Clinton adviser tells me, the United States is prepared to work diplomatically with the Bosnians as it has not before.

If that means that Washington will find out their bottom line and help them formulate proposals for equitable partition and a viable nation, fine. But if "encouragement" means that America leans on them to abandon sovcreignty in their capital, or give up corridor connection of their enclaves and access to the sea, that would be a betrayal.

Pictures can energize diplomats, Almost as stunning as the images of death in the market-place was last week's photo of the visit to Sarajevo of Pakistan's prime minister, Benature of Pakistan's prime minister, Benature of the prime minister, Benature of zir Bhutto, marching alongside Turkey's prime minister, Tansu Ciller. Central Asia: Stationing the Fox at the Chicken Coop Entrance

T) ARIS - The web of military and economic agreements that Russia is weaving across the independent states on its ragged southern fringe is indicator of a new burst of expanionism. Expansion could come if political and economic trends continue to spiral downward in Russia.

But for the time being Russia is acting in the Cancasus and Central Asia much as Britain and France did 30 years ago in securing military bases and economic advantage in their former colonies.

Promises of Russian financial or technical aid accompany a Russian military presence intended to secure the newly independent regimes against internal and external threat. Citizens of Kenya or Chad will instantly recognize this postcolonial pattern.

Alain Juppe did not find the comparison flattering when I suggested it to him. But France's urbane, analytical foreign minister did characterize Russia's actions in its "near abroad" with less alarm than do American commentators who see a plot to subjugate Russia's neighbors first and then reconstruct the Soviet empire. "The Russians are beginning to take things hack in hand throughout the former Soviet Union," Mr. Juppe said of the friendship treaty that Russia and Georgia signed on Feb. 3. "The treaty is a reaffirmation of the Russian role in Georgia," which President Eduard Shevardnadze of Georgia felt obliged to accept to preserve his young nation against separatist forces.

The treaty provides the Russians with three military bases in Georgia. Russian proops will also now be formally stationed in war-torn Armenia and Azerbaijan. Wars brought the Russian military back into those three Cancasus nations. Abundant oil and natural gas reserves in the new Stans of Central Asia — Kazakhstan, Turk-. menistan and Uzbekistan - also create strong interest in Moscow in re-establishing a strong presence.

But a balancing factor, often overlooked, emerged clearly during a remarkable conversation among the five most important Muslim leaders of Central Asia that occurred recently at the World Economic Forum in Davos. Switzerland. That factor is the sharp and unwieldy differences existing within the petchwork quilt of nations that were given unexpected and un-sought liberation by the Soviet col-lapse. Stitched together by self-interest and fear, as well as geography, these new nations are determined to draw-the Russians back in only far enough to preserve their own independence. The West, accustomed to seeing the Soviet compire as a monolith, risks not seeing the Central Asian trees for the Russian forest. The United States and its European allies risk depriving the new states of vital room to maneuver by seeing events in the Stans of Central Asia only or largely through the prism of Russian nationalism and its history of expansionism.

This should be avoided. The Great Game, as the military-based diplomacy of the 19th century was styled, has become the Oreater Game, with multiple actors and many possible outcomes that the Russians will influence but not control.

Prime Minister Benazir Bhutto of Pakistan and President Suleyman Demirel of Turkey came to Davos to pitch their countries as natural geographic and financial outlets for the landlocked Central Asians. This hucksterism at a high level suggests the enormous stakes involved in the construction of new pipelines for oil and gas, transportation systems and finan-cial networks out of Central Asia.

Islam Karimov, president of Uz-bekistan, humly rejected Miss Bhutto's simplistic assurances that the war in Afghanistan and Islamic funda-mentalism are not major threats to the entire region. "Russia is the guarantor of security in Central Asia," he said. But Mr. Karimov and Saparmurad Niyazov, president of Turkmenistan, which already has three small U.S. oil companies operating on its soil, also indicated that they would resist efforts by Moscow to re-establish economie domination over their territo-ries. "We give priority to Russia and to Turkey," Mr. Karimov said, pointedly putting Ankara on the same footing economically as Moscow.

The most farseeing and well estab lished of the new leaders of Central Asia, Nursultan Nazarbayev, president of Kazakhstan, echoed that thought when I asked him if he con-sidered Russia the guarantor of his nation is bordered by "huge states, Russia, China, Turkey," with whom Kazakhstan will maintain "an equality of friendship." The best guarantor of security for security. He noted that his oil-rich

Kazakhstan would be Western in-vestment, which he implied will enable the Central Asians to ease themselves out of the Russian orbit.

These leaders accept that station-ing the Russian fox at the chicken coop entrance is a dangerous tactic. But with Western investment and Western diplomatic support for their diversity, they hope to keep the fox on the leash this time. It is too early to assume pessimistically that they will not be able to do that and thus help deprive them of that chance. The Washington Post.

1894: A Bizarre Tale

PARIS - The Figure this morning [Feb. II] tells a story of a certain M. Leroy, Commissary of Police at Trouville, who wished to get rid of his wife. He started a suit for divorce, but be decided to put her out of the way for a few years. Taking advantage of his position M. Leroy forcibly sequestrated his wife in a convent. Alter a month and a half Mme. Leroy persuaded the Lady Superior that she had been the victim of an infamous plot and was allowed to go free. But, fearing to cause trouble to the Lady Superior, Mme. Leroy kept silence about what had occurred. Meanwhile a divorce had been pronounced.

1919: Spartacist Menace

LONDON - The Spartacist menace, which had been scotched and, as some people thought, destroyed, has been suddenly renewed in Germany. Increasing disorders and alarming general unrest throughout the country are reported in the latest German-official wireless messages. Under the leadership of Eichhorn, formerly Prefect of Police, the Spartacists again attacked the Government troops yesterday [Feb. 9] as the latter were requisitioning supplies in the Central Markets. Five were killed and thirty wounded in the first attack.

1944: All-Side Attack

ALGIERS — [From our New Yorkedition:] The Germans have begun to attack from all land sides the Allied. expeditionary forces that landed one the Anzio-Nettuno beachhead in Italy on Jan. 22. While the enemy's strongest blow fell on the troops en-trenched north and west of Carrocctor (Aprilia), smaller Nazi units advanced along the coast from the northwest and southeast, and also tried to beat the Allies back from positions west of Cisterna. All the attacks were repulsed, and near Ciaterna American troops counter-at-« tacked and made a slight advance.

Yes, the Young Will Pay

Tucked away in the new U.S. federal budget is a 14-page essay that will throw gasoline on the fires of generational warfare. The essay offers statistical backing for a theory especial-ly popular among Americans under 30: that their generation will have to pay out a lot of money to cover the costs of today's government borrowing and tomorrow's retirement costs for baby boomers. The younger crowd can take only so much comfort from the fact that members of the baby boom are, in turn, paying out a lot more than their elders.

The essay is huilt around calculations of "net tax rates" on generations, calculated by figuring out the taxes that their members will pay during their lifetimes and subtracting the benefits they will get back from the government (such as Social Security payments). An American born in 1910 has a good deal: the net lifetime tax rate is only 27.2 percent of income. The average bahy boomer born in 1950 can expect to pay out 33.2 percent. The tax take goes up to 36.5 percent for those born in 1970, and 36.9 percent for those born in 1980. Older folks did especially well because taxes were relatively low during their younger years, but Social Security payments have risen steadily with inflation.

The Office of Management and Budget also provided calculations of what people can expect to pay in or get back from the government over the rest of their lives. A woman from in 1922 is in great shape — her tax payment will be a negative $124,600, because she will be receiving lots more government benefits (such as Social Security) than she will pay back in taxes. But the average man born in 1952 will pay in $171,000 more to the government than he will take out; the average woman born in the same year will pay it $69,000 more than she will take out. It is worse if birth was in 1967; the average man born that year will pay in a net $203,000, the average woman $101,000.

The study did offer one other useful set of findings suggesting that when it comes to generational imbalances, the United States is fairer than Italy, but substantially less fair than Norway — Italy and Norway being the only other two countries that keep "generational accounts." According to the budget document, the generational imbalance in Italy is two to three times greater than that of the United States because Italy's debt is proportionately higher, because the Italian government pays out more in transfer payments, and because its population is aging more rapidly.

But Norway, with a smaller debt than the United States, has a "generational imbalance" only half as large as America's.

Estimates like these are a very long way from perfect, since they assume a future much like the present, which could turn out to be quite wrong. Who, for example, would have predicted the high inflation of the late 1970s and the impact it would have on the indexed Social Security payments going to this genera-tion of elderly Americans? Still, the figures do show that this generation of budget-makers ought to pay more heed to the interests of the next generation of taxpayers.

Time to Act in Bosnia

It is as in Hitler's time - that is how European diplomats are behaving. Facing Bosnian genocide, they besitate, scared by their shadows. They mumble lies. They bope to calm the aggressor with concessions. They say they want to prevent the worst; in so doing they prepare catastrophe. For us and for our children, we have to do something to stop the war in ex-Yugoslavia. Military intervention will have costs, even heavy ones. However, tomorrow it will be harder and bloodier. - Il Messaggero (Rome).

The Real Peace Process Is Going Well

By Michael Leifer

N EW YORK — Arriving in a farm village south of Tel Aviv on New Year's Eve was singularly unexciting. All that was special was that we had been met by our entire level families that it would be a solid that we had been met by our entire level families that it would be solid to the collapse. Israeli family at the airport; usually one of the parents is too busy to come or one of our twin grand-daughters has a cold. For Israelis the new year had begun in Septem-ber, on Rosh Hashanah. As for news, the big splash that mutual recognition between the Vatican and Israel had made in the American and European papers was not that mind-boggling to Israelis.

The story of Vatican and Israeli officials exchanging formal docoments was front-page, but only a bit more special than the still continuing stream of newly or reknit relations between the Jewish state and countries all over the world that until recently had refused to acknowledge Israel's existence. The Vatican was special because of the lateness of its acknowledgment that the Holy Land is governed by Jews, and because of the tragedy-filled history between the two religious communities, which of course had a lot to do with the lateness. When Rome said "yes" to a Jewish government headquartered in Jerusalem, more than 130 countries had already done so.

Dozens, particularly in Africa and Asia, which had shunned Israel because of threats from an Arab world backed by the might of the Soviet Union, are now doing diplomatic and economic business in Israel. This, the end of the isolation of the Jewish state from much of the world community, is the real story which has fundamentally changed so much in the world in the last few years, ended the possibility of an existence-threatening war for Israel. The supply of arms to hostile Arab states stopped or dribbled to little. Arab hostility lost its punch, and in some cases even its frown.

In this perspective, the peace process reinvigorated by the hand-shake that thrilled the world and yielded Yasser Arafat and Yitzhak Rabin a spot on that annual Time magazine cover was not such great news. To be sure, it was spectacular to witness. But it is only part of that larger process of Israel's acceptance in the world community.

Nor does it matter too much if the peace process takes longer and meets more obstacles than had been expected. The real peace process is that other one — recognition of Israel; trade with it; the quiet but very real breakdown of the Arab boycott; the steady growth of investments and joint ventures taking advantage of Israel's skilled work force, enriched in recent years by large numbers of immigrants from the then Soviet Union; the tourists and husiness people from Asia who stood in line ahead of my wife and me at Ben-Gurion airport. There was a 25 percent drop in Israel's trade deficit in the year to last November. Exports in the January November period of 1993, compared with the same period of 1992, were up by 15 percent. Employment in the third quarter of 1993 rose by 6.5 percent, Buried amid news of new investments was a report that an israeli company, Tudiran, was setting up a cellular telephone network in rural China. What all this new political and economic activity adds up to is the big news of the "peace process." Not only does no responsible political leader or public or media figure question Israel's "right to exist" any longer (a demeaning formulation to begin with). With Israel's steadily advancing integration into the inter national community, there no longer exists a threat to her survival. ft was not long ago that it was accurate to say that Israel could not afford to lose a war, because that would mean the end of the country.

In this history of reliance on the well-nigh superhuman performance of its military lie the roots of Israel's fanatic concern with national securi-ty — or, to put it more bluntly, its deep sense of insecurity. There is today an unarticulated sense of relief and hope that was not there before. Along with acceptance by the world, there is bound to come more concern with the world beyond Leb-anon. Syria and the West Bank. Acceptance implies a degree of responsibility toward those who accept. Perhaps the next challenge, while Israel makes and ensures peace with its neighbors will be to match its contributions to tropical agriculture and state-of-the-art electronics with a quality of statesmanship that transcends the neighborhood. After all, it was Issiah who coined that phrase about swords and plowshares. International Herald Tribune.

Davos to Delhi: The Search For a Better, Richer World

By Flora Lewis

N EW DELHI — It is a long way from Davos to Delhi in practical ly every sense. The contrast was all the greater last week when I went from the power conference of a comple of thousand Important People, including a score of government heads and lots of big businessmen at the annual World Economic Forum in the chic Swiss resort, to a seminar in New Delhi on "Religion and Politics."

Davos was about money. It was about power, too, but the steady undercurrent was about the power to attract money, the importance of Both had a nagging sense :: of something missing. Both felt the threat of the old sound money to a stable society, the climate it takes to grow wealth, the empire of the market. It was about money and the hopes of nations, money that knows no horders. money's constant, relentless drive to reproduce itself.

The observation that economics has replaced security as the key concern of international relations is already trite. The people who come to Davos also worry about political upheaval, violent conflict, acute social grievance, but especially because these can make things unpredictable, distort trade and destroy assets.

Money needs a steady, reliable world. The old complaint that arms merchants need wars to consume their products has not been totally removed. But it is a marginal matter compared with the new recognition that conquest is a much more expensive, less rewarding way to make mon-ey than cultivating the myriad de-mands of an insatiable world, and that sellers depend on buyers who can afford what they offer.

It is fine as far as it goes. The market has proved more effective than any other system in producing what peo-ple need and want to consume. But it isn't enough.

Not only do its statistics leave ont too many people hard put to compete, and ignore the real pains of the rat race, they don't account for all the other yearnings that motivate people, sometimes to suicidal violence.

Dethi was aboot ideas and beliefs. The seminar, with some 35 self-acknowledged intellectuals, was organized by Unesco and the Raijy Gandhi Foundation to discuss the tensions arising in today's world between the claims of religion and politics.

There were Christians, Jews, Hindus, Muslims, Confucians, addressing, from their different backgrounds, the issues of church and state, divine right and human rights, the secular North and the traditionalist South. Mostly, though, they shared a like-minded liberalism of spirit, a plea for tolerance, with the exception of a couple of fundamentalists whose arguments only confirmed the convictions of the others.

After all, these were intellectuals defending the right to think for them-selves, which is indeed endangered in many of their societies by those who claim certain knowledge of what God wants them to think.

But at the same time they recognized the urge of religion as communi-ty, as identity, a solid framework for morality and a solace before the eternal mysteries of life and death, of human meaning.

It is a signal failure of modern intellectuals that they have been unable to supply a coherent hasis for morality and ethics as an alternative to the traditional commands, put hy the ab-solutists of religious authority in a way that denies free thought, individual investigation.

Science gives no answers. On the contrary, it is posing deeply troubling new questions once left only to reli-gion. The churches respond from within the traditions that they have shaped into dogma. Population is a familiar example. Historically, human survival depend-ed on fertility. Multiply, say the scriptures. That has happened, to the point where future human survival may depend on restraint, on accepting limits which must be voluntary to preserve human dignity.

But there are newer, even more dif-ficult dilemmas ahead, having to do. with genetic manipulation, conception and birth in previously unimaginable circumstances, the whole new field of bioethics. The churches have had no new revelations? Where they dominate politics, they reject ques-tioning, mount barriers, divide people and encourage turmoil even as they gather in the faithful.

So Delhi and Davos were not so far apart after all, searching for a more open world, better prospects. They both had a nagging, uneasy sense of something missing, surge of invention and money, and not much of an idea on how to deal with it. Both felt the fiery threat of the old demons, hatred. fanaticism, nationalism, misery, war, and were looking for ways to put them down. There's far to go.

The Bosnian Predicament

Regarding "And So It Continues in Sarajevo, Death by Death" (Opinion, Feb. 3) by Zlatko Dizdarevic:

The present predicament is the political choice not of the outside world but of the Bosnian government. The problem is President Alija Izetbegovic's calculated gamble not to negotiate seriously. in opes that a military victory may yet produce a Muslim-dominated unitary Bosnian state — even against the will of its Christian (Serb and Croat) majority. To ignore the Muslim rejection of the Geneva settlement and to focus attention on the suffering civilians of one side illustrates the meaning of the term atrocity propaganda."

Casualties are fewer in Sarajevo today than a year ago, and the people are fed by the United Nations. Mass deaths can be avoided if the West rejects the moral blackmail of the Muslim authorities. S. TRIFKOVIC.

Premature Independence

Regarding "More Meaningless Banal-ities" (Opinion, Feb. 8) by Jim Hoogland: When, in 1992, the Bosnian Muslim president, Alija Izetbegovic, declared the country's independence without consulting its Serbs and Croats, he should have known that he thereby signed Bosnia's death warrant.

He may have been misled by the immediate recognition by Germany, a country whose constitution bars its solempty promises and "meaningless ha-nalines" kept his hopes alive. Obviously of late he has been receiving arms and volunteers" to fight back. At this point further carnage in Sarajevo (for which the Serbs, for the first time, deny responsibility) is working in his favor, helped by professional public relations efforts in the United States. It is time to curse all three houses and stop the Muslims from prolonging the war and the sufferings of the civilian population indefinitely. It should also be a warning to all nations not to recog-nize the independence of a split-off nation unless the majority of its people have given their consent.

The Ultimate Horror Regarding "U.S. Leaders Ignore Geno-cide, Aide Says" (Feb. 5) by Tim Weiner:

The daily television pictures from Sarajevo confirm Hannah Arendt's dictum that the ultimate horror is that there is oo horror. Europe stands by wringing its hands and waiting for American leadership, which is oowhere to be seen. But surely the ultimate in moral hankruptcy has to be the statement hy Timothy Wirth, the State Department counselor. Mr. Wirth is a defeated senator from Colorado, long-time Washingum insider and Democratic Party worthy. According to your article, a State De-partment colleague of Mr. Wirth's, Richard Johnson, said that Mr. Wirth served that "the moral stakes in Rosnia. agreed that "the moral stakes in Bosnia were high, but asserted that there were diers from fighting abroad. Subsequent recognition by other countries and many even higher moral stakes at play: the survival of the fragile liberal coalition represented by this presidency."

So genocide has to take second place to Bill Clinton's re-election. As a former Democratic National Committeeman representing Democrats Abroad, I must ask in dismay: Can these Democrats be the beirs to Woodrow Wilson and Franklin Roosevelt, to Harry Truman and Adlai Stevenson?

Nonrabid Britain

Those who write about Britain's regulations concerning rabies forget the most important factor: There is no rahies in the wildlife of Britain.

Domestic animals can be immunized. wildlife cannot. When I was visited by a fox in my inner London garden, rabies never crossed my mind, only delight Were rabies to enter Britain, this fox, and other urban wildlife, would have to be put down.

Latvian Jews

When visiting Riga, the capital of Latvia, late last year, I observed to my consternation that, in identification cards issued by the Latvian government, Jewish citizens of Latvia were not identified as Latvians hut as "Jews." This is painfully close to the Nazi categorizatioo system.

Friday, when the joy of opening ceremonies in Sarajevo repeats itself in the Norwegian town of Lillehammer, let us remember what Sarajevo had, and what bumanity has lost and continues to lose.

Let us remember that the essential message of the Games is not found in triple axels, slap shots or medal counts. It is found in 44 words of the Olympic Charter: "The goal of the Olympic movement is to coorribute to building a peaceful and better world by educating youth through sport practiced without discrimination of any kind, and in the Olympic spirit, which requires mutual

Politics and commercialism seem as much a part of the modern Games as computer timers. A recent book, "The Lords of the Rings," attacks the International Olympic Committee's members, methods and motives.

Of themselves, the Olympic rings are neither hallowed nor talismanic. But if you look past sport's bureaucrats, its hype and exploitation, you will find a transcendant Olympian spirit.

It enveloped me in Sarajevo, as I stood on the infield during opening ceremonies, surrounded by Serhs, Croats, Muslims and people of every other eth-nic group and belief, celebrating together. It changed me in Seoul, where I walked among 10.000 rejoicing athletes during closing ceremonies. Representatives of every part of the buman spectrum had come to beat one another and to prove they were the best, and they had — not by winning medals but by winning friends.

Olympians are coming together again, not as representatives of their sport or their country, but of their ideals. Two Olympians, the American Marilyn King (pentathlon, '72 and '76) and the Russian Yelena Petushkova (gold and silver medalist dressage, '721 have gathered other Olympians to form an international organization called the Peace Team, to encourage people everywhere to look at peace as a common and achievable

Tracking Hungarian Green

By Alan Levy

ADACSONY, Hungary — The $6.4 hillion-a-year California wine industry claims Hungarian roots. Back in 1849, Count Agoston Haraszthy, always more soldier of fortune than aristocrat, arrived in San Diego just a few months after gold was discovered in them thar hills. Unable to stake his own claim as he roamed the territory, this failed '49er didn't fail to recognize other treasures: soil and sun even more ideal for grape-growing than his native continent's. He bought land up north in Sonoma and persuaded the gov-ernor of California to send him on a vineyard tour of Europe; there would be no fee, but expenses would be reimbursed.

In 1862, Haraszthy returned to California with 100,000 cuttings from 300 classic Old World wine-grape varieties, some of which. transplanted, did indeed grow grapes far finer than their noble forebears. But California now was a state of the union and its legislature reneged on the territorial ex-governor's agreement to pay Harasziby's $12,000 expense account. Irate and frustrated, the count moved south in quest of new fortune — but, crossing a stream in Nicaragua in 1869, he fell into the water and was eaten by alligators.

His sons, Arpad and Attila, who had stayed home to run the vineyards, built their winery into one of California's major labels, Buena Vista. Decades later, a delegation of Hungarian winegrowers visited the New World and were especially taken with a semi-dry white wine called Green Hungarian that neither they nor anybody else in Hungary was able to trace.

Three years ago, while researching a travel guide to post-Communist Hungary. I first beheld the Badacsony, a spooky, coffin-like basalt peak of the highlands along the remote west end of Lake Balaton's otherwise touristed north shore. Actually, the 438-meter (1,437-foot) Mount Badacsony - its slopes rising from the lake - is an extinct volcano flanked by conical hills on which land has been tilled painfully and lovingly for centuries. There are vineyards everywhere and interesting, often splendid, white wines — most notably, the Big Three: Rieslings, Veknyelu (Blue Stem) and Szurkebarat (Pinot Gris) whose makers maintain that "no vine will produce good wine unless it can see us own reflection in the Balaton." They believe it is not enough for the sun to shine on a vine; the undersides of the leaves also need light, which is reflected from the lake's mirror-like surface. Others claim the wine draws its strength from the fire of old volcanoes and its color from sunlight on the lake.

N a tavern in the town - actually, a turn-of-the-century villa overlooking the lake - 1 told the tale of Count Haraszthy and his mysterious Green Hungarian to the innkeeper, Janos Peter. "I think I have the answer to the riddle," he said. Darting into his wine cellar, he emerged with a bottle of Zoldszilvani (Green Sylvaner) that, to the best of my memory, greatly resembled the Green Hungarian I tasted in California in 1989. At the time, I was more interested in the saga of Janos Peter, who was looking like one of the new Hungary's first success stories. In the declining days of communism in the 1980s, he had leased the decaying villa from a trade union that had been using and abusing it and hy guaranteeing two years' hot meals free, assembled a team of workers to remodel it without pay. The house also served as kitchen and wine cellar for an adjoining garden restaurant. But this base camp was just the beginning of why his neighbors, sometimes with mockery, referred to him as "Peter the Great."

His empire already straddled both sides of the road above, continuing upward through vineyards to a 600-seat stone-floored, vinecovered indoor-outdoor terrace restaurant, Szoloskert (Garden of Grapes), with ceramic stove and Cinemascopie views of Balaton and Badacsony. And, like any imperialist, Peter was planning expansion — to year-round, instead of June-September, operation, plus a partnership in a neighboring pension for overnight guests.

Late in 1993, I returned to Badacsony to see how Peter was faring and to try to solve the mystery of the Green Hungarian's source. To my dismay, Peter was no longer there. The Szoloskert restaurant was now the Malihu discotheque. The pension hadn't opened all summer. But the Nagy family, at whose cozy country inn, Borbaratok (Friends of Wine), I took lodging, knew where to find him, for their eldest son, Istvan Jr., had taken over the lease on the Szolos-kert. Their second son, Miklos, offered to drive me 40 kilometers (25 miles) to the spa town of Heviz, where Peter's newly opened Badacsony Wine Restaurant was bustling with business, even off-season.

A little thinner at 48, but no less jovial than when last we met, Janos Peter calls himself "one of the early victims of Hungarian capitalism.

The present government didn't respond kindly to my kind of privatization," he said, "so I could obtain no federal subsidies or loans and therefore couldn't find any partners because the system wanted me to start from scratch." In other words, having made deals with a communist union and its workers at a time when communists were the only people with whom one could deal had cost him dearly. A mild heart attack at the beginning of 1993 convinced him to bow out before the struggle consumed him.
Instead, he bought out a state-run striptease-and-jazz club and transformed it into My courier drove two hours from San Francisco to Sonoma on northern California's rainiest day of 1993. She arrived by back roads after a flash flood had washed out the bridge from the winery to the Haraszthy house, between the bell tower and the ruins of the guest house, which had caught fire on Thanksgiving night. Jan Haraszhy chilled the wines before filling two Buena Vista glasses with the Nagys' 1984 Green Sylvaner, which he studied, swirled and sniffed before pronouncing. "Nice bouquet," sipping and saying: "I like that very much. Sometimes white wines are so delicate they're anemic. This is not one of those. This has a full flavor."

After a few more sips, Haraszthy asked his visitor: "Did you read 'Sesame and Lilies' in high school?"

Not entirely surprised by the blank look this elicited, he went on: "In it, John Ruskin said, "Words are the unjust stewards of men's ideas.' I hesitate to say too much. I would almost say it's an aggressive wine. No, 'strong' and 'aggressive' are not the right words. This wine has personality, it has the flavor of the grape. Character, lots of charac-ter. A remarkable wine."

ANOS PETER'S 1990 he liked a little less, though he noted that its relative youth made it smoother and darker. Since, for some of the same reasons the Communists gave, Buena Vista no longer makes Green Hungarian or any other Syl-vaner, he trotted out a bottle of Weibel's Green Hungarian, which he praised as "what we drink at home." It was sweeter than either Zoldszilvani. But now came the key question: Were the wines related?

'Almost certainly no," he replied. "One fact that's very little known is that my grandfather couldn't go back to Hungary in the 1850s because be'd supported the 1848 revolt against the Habshurgs and there was a price on his head. So none of the grapes he brought back came from Hungary. They all were from France, Italy, Spain, Germany and Austria; somehow he got into Austria. even though it was Habsburg headquarters. And I would guess that Green Hungarian is of Austrian origin."

Peter opened a bottle of Green Sylvaner as perfect accompaniment to my exquisitely heavy dinner of lightly fried goose hreasts in a mushroom sauce slivered with cheese and sauerkraut and accompanied by buttery parsley potatoes. "A half a bottle a day opens the arteries." he assured me, leading inevitably to the closing cliche: "Wine is the best doctor.

Earlier in the day, I had met with Peter Bekassy, president of the Badacsony Wine Growers Association, who told me that because the grape yields low qualities, Green Sylvaner had virtually disappeared from the market in Communist times. But he wished me well in establishing Green Sylvaner's link with California's Green Hungarian - and awaited results of the acid test: a tasting in California by Agoston Haraszthy's great-grandson. Jan Haraszthy, who manages the Buena Vista Vineyards in Sonoma. A trusted courier was dispatched with two bottles of Zoldszilvani: a Janos Peter young 1990 and a Nagy family vintage 1984. The latter was my reward for declaring that the Nagys' "open 1989 Zoldszilvani from the barrel was the purest and tartest I'd ever tasted; it went perfectly with Lake Balaton's best-loved fish, a pike-perch variant called fogas.

Three little boys befriend an old recluse, fix up his derelict house and find that the funny old lady down the street may have been his great love back in ancient warnime days. The old gent is Rentaro Mikuni, one of Japan's finest film actors, the funny lady is Chikage Awashima, re-membered from some of the best films of the '50s, and Somai directed the 1986 "Typhoon Clnh" and last year's splendid "Ohikoshi," Nonetheless, all are defeated by a stereotyped script based on a commercial children's novel. The three twodimensional kids (the sensitive one, the smart one, the fat one) are inculcated with the social virtues (be respectful to your elders, help the poor) and — as opines one of the adults at the end — learn a valuable lesson. I have no idea what it is - perhaps not to make an "Our Gang" segment that lasts two bours. (Donald Richie, IHT)

Lambert's character, a smuggler named Dani, reluc-tantly becomes part of a buddy team with a drug-enforcement agent named Cole, played by Mario Van Peebles. The plot involves a boatload of stolen drug money. Lambert's character is ingenuous and not too hright. Van Peebles's is cagey, though not as cagey as he thinks. They might have been an engaging team, but they are stranded without a script. Lambert's humor comes from comic grimaces rather than anything he is given to say. Lambert and Van Peebles are planning to team up again in "Highlander III." Get them a script, fast. (Caryn Jumes, NYT) celebrated abroad, banned at home. The story is told through the eyes of Tietou, a boy who survives the shifting dictates of a capricious regime. In a Beijing neighborhood that looks like a village square, family life is ground to dust. Tieton's mother (Lu Liping) is widowed three times; each of his "fathers" makes Tieton a hine kite that flies high briefly, ending up in tatters. The first husband, denounced by the second, dies in exile, the last falls victim to the Cultural Revolution; the mother is sent to a work camp. The action is minimal, scenes are shot mostly indoors at a dinner table, where the remaining members of this decimated family gather, with strained smiles, under the pall of delation, humiliation and banishment. Wrestling Ernest Hemingway Directed by Randa Haines. U. S. ...

Richard Harris and Robert Du-vall are an "odd couple" of colorful codgers in "Wrestling Ernest Hemingway," strut as a former sea captain, Frank, recently heached in Sweetwater, a faded Florida re-sort town. Abandoned by his son to a seedy apartment building beside the sea, he finds the sition difficult. Moby Dick would find it easier to get com-fortable in a goldfish bowl. It's a friend be needs, and it's a friend he gets. Duvall, whose performance is as controlled as Harris's is overblown, obviously fell head over heels in love. with the role of Walter, a fussy, Cuban bachelor with a passion : for bacon sandwiches, crossword puzzles and ballroom dancing alone in his room. Duvall, a model of old-world courtliness and age-stiffened movements, also manages to sound more like a Havana homeboy than Ricky Ricardo. Aside from their loneliness, the two men have little in common, but they are increasingly drawn-together and soon become inseparable. Neither man; you see, has really had a life. Walter has never tripped the light fantastic with an actual woman only fantasies. And Frank, the eternal child, has never grown up. They do grow, of course, into better versions of themselves — a process that is profound if not surprising.

Stress Relief, Italian TV Style

By Ken Shulman

LORENCE — In the midst of the journey through their evening, ltaly's television audience finds itself once again in Dante Alighieri's savage wood. Each Monday and Friday, between the end of the early movie and the beginning of the late night news, the actor Vittorio Gassman reads a canto from "La Divina Commedia," the nation's (and perhaps the world's) most treasured poem.

Dante's delightful terza rima is not just highbrow TV fare. The first 15-minute reading — on Dec. 12 — attracted nearly 3 million viewers. In their first three episodes, Gassman and Dante have averaged close to a 10-percent audience share, quite a draw for serious, erudite theater.

This is just an indication of how relevant Dante is to our time," says Rubino Rubini, who directs Gassman in the 40-episode series. "There is not one canto in The Inferno" No in Assertion that does not contain at least two verses that are part of our common parlance today."

Historically, public readings of Dante have served more than the cause of litera> first public reading of "The Divine Comedy" in Santa Croce church in Florence in 1373 as the city's posthumous apology for having exiled Dante. In the early 19th century, Italian actors unfurled the work of the poet who had given their country its language as a rallying cry for national unity.

Given that there is a moment during the day when a person has to watch television, we are not displaced that in that displeased that in that moment a person can stumble onto "The Divine Comedy."

So, instead of "The Wheel of Fortune" or "Beavis and Butt-head," Italy is offered one of the most magnificent works of world literature. Popular and somewhat melodramatic, Gassman's Dante is more like a vaccine than a cure. Gassman prescribes small, regular doses of poison in order to render

The readings were filmed from May to July, in 8- to 10-hour sessions that usually included two full cantos. It was a draining enterprise for the crew, and especially for Gassman, who experienced a profound depression during his journey through Dante's epic poem.

without suffering some wound," says the 71-; year-old actor. "It is a plunge into the mysteries of the soul, into suffering. I worked like a beast. The poet's pages tortured me. But when we finished, I felt a liberation. The journey was over. And I was cured."

It remains to be seen whether Gassman's encounter with Dante will prove as therapeutic for his audience as it was for the actor. Critics charge that he imposes too much of his own personality on the poet. Still, whether attracted by Dante or by Gassman, viewers continue to tune their sets to the first channel between 10:45 and 11:00 P. M. and: to purchase the set of 22 "Gassman Reads"

February's Hottest Festival: Meltdown in Albuquerque

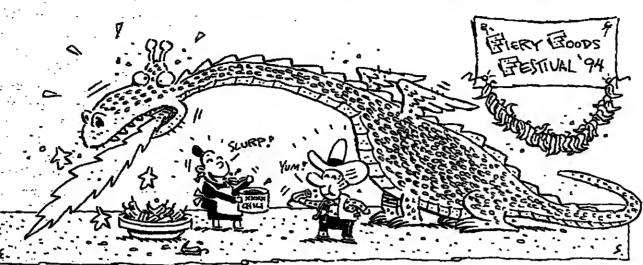

By Richard Lerner

LBUQUERQUE, New Mexico --Every February, in the heart of the Southwest, lovers of the chili peppers. The Fiery Foods Festival, which also bills itself as the Meltdown, is the cutting edge of Constraint the seems of versity. also bills itself as the Meltdown, is the cut-ting edge of Capsicum, the genus of vegeta-bles that gives us sweet bell peppers, the moderately hot jalapeño and the searing ha-bañero. The festival, held at Albuquerque Convention Center, is the brainchild of Mary Jane Wilan and Dave DeWitt. This husband-and-wife team brought us "Whole Chile Pepper Book" (with Nancy Gerlach), "Food Lover's Handbook to the Southwest" and Chile Pepper Magazine (The word is spelled chili or chile, depending on the re-gion.)

This year the festival will take place from Feb. 18 to 20. The first day is for buyers in the food industry; the second and third days are open to the public. Anyone who pays the entry fee of $4 can sample his way through the center in pursuit of the "chili high," an endorphin-releasing response to what would otherwise be a painful experience.

With more than a hundred exhibitors using two dozen varieties of chilies, the festival is testament not only to the appeal that has made salsa a challenge to ketchup's supremacy, but also to the seductive nature of food itself. There are a few medium-sized companies at the festival, but most exhibitors are simply free spirits with a recipe, gambling on the romance of the chili pepper, which has become the most ubiquitous symbol of Southwestern style, gracing everything from boxer shorts to wind chimes. Even New Mexico's professional soccer team is named pasta to peanut brittle, the important characteristic is the burn. The sensation, caused by the chemical capaisein, ranges from a mild tingle to searing pain, and evokes a passionate response in the hearts and mouths of the faithful.

Although chilis are a versatile foodstuff, as attested to by their use in everything from

Susanne Hilou, a young Texan who quit her job as a stockbroker to create Taste Teasers, a company selling hot foods with a Texan bent, exemplifies the irreverent fiery food entrepreneur. Under her businessike blazer she wears a pepper-festooned bustier.

She handed me a sample of her sweet jalapeño spread, the Ultimate Texas Jam, smeared on a cracker with some cream cheese. "It's my mom's recipe," she said.
"Instead of Wonder bread, I grew up on jalapeño spread and com relish." Hilou is now putting the jalapello spread in fine European dark chocolates, which she markets under the name Hot Chocolates. For more burn, she has marinated black beans with

Burn is, of course, a matter of taste. Dave's Gourmet, maker of Dave's Insanity Sauce, is trying to create the hottest culinary experience known to man. The founder, Dave Hirschkopf, was on hand at the last festival, wearing a straitjacket and making tasters sign a joke waiver before allowing people to test his sauce. "Most of the sauces are limited by using the hottest peppers." he says. "We've gone beyond that by using pepper extract, which is much hotter. Any hotter would be irresponsible." Another company that caters to adherents of the "hotter is better" philosophy is Religious Experience Foods of Grand Junction, Colorado. Its Religious Experience Hot Sauce, which I sampled at the festival, comes in four degrees: mild, original, hot and the wrath. Jeffrey Gerlach, president of Los Dos of Albuquerque, a distributor of products made by Quetzl Co., has a different philosophy about heat. "Our emphasis is oo flavor," he says. "It's always easy to add heat that's a cowardly way to produce a hot sauce." Quetzl says it spent six years in Costa Rica developing its version of the habañero chili, according to research the houest chili around. At the show last February some of Quetzl's products were so oew they did not even have labels. Its five sauces, Caribbean and Central American in origin, are made with the rica red chili. One of the company's more unusual flavors was Banana Rama sauce, a concoction of habañero, banana, tamarind, brown sugar and other spices. Hot food means barbecue to many, of course, especially in the Southwest. Sam Bass's barbecue sauce, called Notorious, tied for second place in the 1993 barbecue category, although it was my personal favorite.

"I started with it in about 1985," said Bass, who was once in the oil business. "I got it to where I wanted about three years ago. It tastes sweet, it tastes smoky, then a little hot comes in back behind it." Much of the food at the '93 festival was produced in the Southwest and the Caribbean - but there are some surprises. Tied for an — but there are some surprises. I ted for first place in the marinade category was Mrs. Dog's Jerk Sauce, a variety of a Jamaican sauce. Mrs. Dog is the name of a golden retriever owned by Julie Applegate of Grand Rapids, Michigan. Applegate, who also makes a superb Disappearing Mustard Sauce, says peppers helped her overcome chronic fatigue syndrome. She says her "mission is to spice up the Midwest."

Crazy Caim, a company from Petaluma.

Crazy Cajun, a company from Petaluma, California, makes a harbeque sauce that uses brewed coffee for added flavor. The secondplace salsa winner, Jose Madrid, was from Zanesville, Ohio. The biggest catalogue of products belonged to Lotta Hotta, a compaoy from Overland Park, Kansas, devoted to finding and developing fiery foods.

Julie Feldman, who makes spicy pesto sauces, a sort of Mexican-Italian blend, calls her company Spaghetti Western, Mary Dawn Wright, a classically trained French chef, gave up her catering business to start World Harvest, a pasta company. She works with a part-time employee. Among her pasta flavors are Red Chile, Green Chile, Thai Chile Peanut, Salsa! Salsa! and Chipotle Extremes and odd pairings are the salient feature at the show. A visitor can start with a Sumptuous Selections Bloody Mary, accompanied by the chili-coated nuts of Enchanted Desert Products, move along to the various meat, fish and chicken dishes and finish with Lotta Hotta's Jalapeño Dutch Chocolate

Fudge. A suitable accompaniment would be the 1993 winner of the most unusual product award, Cave Creek Chile Boer, made by the brothers Ed and Dick Chilleen. Cave Creek is a pilsener beer with a whole serrano pepper in each bottle. The pepper releases most of its heat into the beer, leaving a pleasant tasting and relatively mild beer-scented pepper. "It kind of grows on you," says Ed Chilleen, "like salsa and chips." Herb Schon of New York, second-place winner in the unusual product category, has added jalapeño rugelach to the other varieties offered by Grandma's Recipe Rugelach. El Rancho, as he calls it, is surprisingly sweet and unshocking. Schon says he has obtained kosher certification for the product and hopes to move his operation to the South-

LTHOUGH the festival food may be international, New Mexico still reigns as Chili Land, where the potent little peppers are sold from the backs of pickup trucks and in abandoned gasoline stations, where salsa is oo every restaurant table, and one gets used to the question "Red or green?" in short order.

And though exhibitors come and go, each year the Fiery Foods Festival cootinues to grow. This year's festival will have 125 ex-hibitors, with a large Caribbean contingent and 10 chefs demonstrating their techniques. For the curious, one visit may be enough.

but for the true chili lover two days are too short for tasting such delights as Heart of the Desert's New Mexico Chili Pistachioes, Saguaro's chili and lime-flavored, hand-cooked potato chips, Doo Alfonso's chipotles in adobo, Virgin Fire's hot sauces from St. John, and a volcano's worth of saisa, marinades and barbecue sauces.

The IHT's restaurant critic has set out on a rare and ambitious gastronomic journey, a search for the 10 best restaurants in the world.

She will be rating, in month-to-month articles, the top restaurants from region to region, and comparing them to one another.

Whether it's the best in dim sum, delicious but secret sushi bars or the finest of French tables, she will guide readers with articles about inexpensive restaurants as well as the grand ones in the world's major cities. She will also share her tips on how to select quality restaurants in unfamiliar territory.

Don't miss this series.

EU Quota System Rotten, They Say

By Tom Buerkle

al Herald Tribuna BRUSSELS — Latin American countries hit back at the European Union in their banana battle on Thursday, demanding that the Union virtually dismantle its quota and tariff barriers or be dragged before the sooo-to-be-created world trade cop. EU officials rejected the demand, however, which left both sides on course for a clash that involves much more than the Union's $2 billion-a-year appetite for bananas.

The dispute has provoked out-rage in banana-loving Germany, the world's largest consumer. It inported bananas freely until the Union imposed EU-wide quotas in July, and the "crooked fruit" is regarded as a symbol of liberation in the former East Germany.

The case also could decide whether trade privileges Europe has long extended to former colonies and other developing countries will be outlawed when new trade rules come into force next year.

Officials from the five countries - Ecnador, Guatemala, Honduras, Panama and Mexico - demanded that the Union lift its quota for banana imports to 3.2 million tons from 2.0 million and slash tariffs on Latin imports. Those moves would pose a serious threat to the so-called ACP countries: African, Caribbean and Pacific nations, led by the Ivory Coast, Cameroon and St. Lucia, which now get duty-free access to the European market.

Farm Commissioner René Steichen rejected the demand as unrealistic. One commission official said such a big increase in Latin imports would send banana prices phinmeting and "destroy the economies of the ACP countries." Instead, Mr. Steichen restated an EU offer to raise its quota to 2.1 million tons this year and 2.2 million in 1995, and said that offer would engage in similar self-examination.

TOKYO — When scholars at the Massachusetts Institute of Technology published "Made in America," the influential analysis of the strengths and weaknesses of U.S. industry at the end of the 1980s, they challenged their peers in Japan to engage in similar self-examination.

Now, five years later, the Japanese are about to release "Made in Japan." But its authors are already saying that the project has foundered over a lack of academic independence and the collapse of the bubble economy, which desiccated rosy notions of Japan's economic fundamentals.

"At MIT they addressed the seal issue." said

"At MIT, they addressed the real issues," said Haruo Shimada, a professor of economics at Keio University who led the anthors' investigation into the Japanese electronics industry. "But we received funding from industry, so we had to ask a comoletely different set of questions."

pletely different set of questions.

Instead of focusing on Japanese industry, which is basically healthy, he said, many academics thought the project should examine broader issues related to the media, bureaucracy, politics and education. "These are the real problems," he said.

"Made in Japan" reflects the challenges of finding fash in a content where

ing fault in a society where cooperation often means avoiding criticism. So whereas "Made in America" helped inform the U.S.-Japan Structural Impediment negotiations during George Bush's presidency, "Made in Japan" is unlikely to help the world's two biggest economies resolve their so-called framework trade talks, which are dead-locked over Washington's demand that Tokyo agree to objective criteria to measure market access. Prime Minister Morihiro Hosokawa is hoping for a breakthrough when he meets President Bill Clinton in Washington on Friday. Authors refused to discuss the content of "Made in Japan" in detail. But they said it would offer an analysis of the strengths of Japanese industry based on prodoction technology developed through cooperation on the workshop floor.

Trade Deal Slipping Despite Hata Talks

WASHINGTON — A U.S. official said Thursday that the odds were running high against a transpacific trade deal in time for the U.S.-Japan summit meeting Friday.

"The odds are pretty high we won't have a deal," the official said on condition of anonymity. "We're pretty far apart everywhere."

Negotiators are working all-out to try to strike a handful of market-opening deals before President Bill Clinton and Prime Minister Morihiro Hosokawa meet here Friday, but the official said chances for were 70-30 against success.

Hoping to break the logiam, Foreign Minister Tsutomu Hata flew into Washington on Wednesday evening. More talks are scheduled between Mr. Hata and the U.S. side later Thursday, but the official said that thus far there had been no substantive progress.

Mr. Hata said the two sides had made headway. but the U.S. secretary of state, Warren M. Christo-pher, said Washington was "disappointed" with the scant progress.

However, the work also will point out that Japan's persistent trade surpluses and an end to the era of rising demand for cars, electronics and other commodities will put new pressures on man-

Mr. Bloomberg said Wednesday that his Bloomberg Financial Markets service would create a 13-houra-day, 7-day-a-week television news service called Bloomberg Direct that will be transmitted on DirecTV, a satellite-to-home broadcasting service that will go on the air in April. But to receive the signal, viewers these will not go on sale until April. So when the service begins, "in eight to 10 markets, not nationally at first," said Linda Brill of DirecTV, there may be no audience.

But both Mr. Bloomberg and DirecTV, which is owned by GM Hughes Electronics, said they expected steady growth for this type of service, which is known as DBS, for direct broadcast satellite.

Thinking Ahead /Commentary

ASHINGTON -- It is not surprising Americans are running out of patience with Japan. Despite 15 frustrating years of ne-gotiations, cajolery and threats — and a huge revaluation of the yea — Japan is still piling up vast and politically unacceptable trade surpluses with the United States.

Like so many of his predecessors, President Bill Clinton has promised to do better by being tougher—so tough, in fact, that he is recklessly endangering his meeting with Prime Minister Morihiro Hosokawa on Friday. If neither side blinks, the talks might end in virtually unprecedented discord and re-by an unnecessary dispute over trade targets, which is poisoning the atmosphere between the two capitals. Washington is implying that Japanese leaders can no longer be trusted. In fact Mr. Hosokawa is more trustworthy than most of his predecessors, in the sense that he geaminely believes in doing things more the American way. He wants to open the Japanese market and deregulate the economy—and let politicians, not Japan's notori-ous bureaucrats, run the show. Ous ourcancrais, run the snow.

as "benchmarks" to measure Japan's improv-ing performance, the Japanese have been bitten twice already.

Previously accepted figures for Japanese im-ports of semiconductors and auto parts, which the Japanese thought were nonbinding, were quickly interpreted by the Americans as guar-anteed market shares. Tokyo, too, is determined not to be led up the garden path again.

The Japanese, of course, are quite right to suspect that what the Americans really want are not statistical yardsticks, of which there are more than enough already, but guaranteed minimum shares of specific Japanese markets. There is a major inconsistency in the Ameri-There is a major inconsistency in the American position. In virtually the same breath, the Americans are pressing Japan to open its markets and insisting on measures that require government intervention — the very kind of collusion between public and private sectors that Washington has so long denounced.

its market, than the United States does. But Washington's aim should be to reduce that control, not strengthen it.

Indeed the whole problem, says Clyde V. Prestowitz Jr., president of the Economic Strategy Institute in Washington, is that the Japanese system is geared to resisting imports. In a study released this week, Mr. Prestowitz argues that traditional macroeco-nomic methods — such as bolstering Japan's growth and manipulating exchange rates—will never significantly reduce such a structural trade deficit. Clinton-style measures are needed, he says.

But even Mr. Prestowitz, a Japan hawk, concedes that Mr. Clinton, in trying to pry open Japanese markets, and Mr. Hosokawa, in seeking to deregulate the economy, are actually on the same side. Both men have to fight Japan's entrenched bureaucratic and visiness interests, he said.

Mr. Clinton, in fact, should try to strengthen Mr. Hosokawa with a successful summit meeting, not risk weakening him with a failed one. The president's approach so far shows more concern with outdoing his predecessors in toughness than appreciation of the potential for real change in Japan. While the United States should be encouraging the world to move to a stronger multilateral trading system, Mr. Clinton is engag-ing in bilateral bullying. He should try trusting Mr. Hosokawa instead.

If Washington would just drop its willful insistence on targets, there is every hope of a more constructive U.S. Japanese relationship. When he meets Mr. Hosokawa at the White House on Friday, Mr. Clinton should

Focus on Inflation Weighs on Stocks

NEW YORK - U.S. stock and Treasury bond prices (ell Thursday on concern that Friday's producer price report for January would show resurgent inflation.

The producer price report will be the first major set of inflation data to be released since the Federal

N.Y. Stocks

Reserve Board pushed up the federal funds rate, which is the rate banks charge each other for over-night loans, on Feb. 4. Rising inflation could spur the central bank to push rates higher, analysts said.

High rates pressure stock prices because capital for business expansion becomes expensive, and alternative investments such as certificates of deposit and money-market accounts offer improved yields.

The Dow Jones industrial average closed down 36.58 points, at 3.895.34. Declining issues outpaced advances by 5 to 3 on the New York Stock Exchange.

Stocks also got a jult from com-ments by Elaine Garzarelli, a Lehman Brothers analyst who is credited with predicting the 1987 market collapse. Ms. Garzarelli said stocks in 30-year bonds at an average yield interest rates by the Fed. She also carnings by a third.

LM Ericsson's American depositary receipts dropped 2% to 42%, despite the telecommunications equipment company's report that its profit doubled in 1993. Ericsson slipped with a sell-off that hit most Stockholm stocks. (Page 13)

In the bond market, inflation concerns outweighed support from strong demand at the final leg of the Treasury's quarterly refinancing. The benchmark 30-year Treasury bond was down 11/32 at 97 16/32 in late trading, with the yield rising to 6.44 percent from 6.41 percent.

not take any action that could cause the dollar to "overshoot" against the Deutsche mark. Mr. Krupp also was quoted as saying the Bundesbank was monitoring the effect on the foreign-exchange market of the Federal Reserve Board's increase in short-term U.S. interest rates last week. The dollar has risen against the mark and other major European currencies since the Fed acted. Earlier, Otto Lambsdorff, a former German economics minister, was quoted as saying that Friday's increase by the Fed had made it difficult harder for the Bundesbank

At the end of New York trading, the dollar was quoted at 1.7534 DM, down from 1.7575 DM on Wednesday, and at 108.25 yea, compared with 108.35 yea. The seven-year low reached Wednesday, rose to $1.4625 from $1.4605. Some analysts said that Tuesday's quarter-point reduction in the Bank of England's minimum lending rate appeared to have been inspired more by political than by economic factors, damaging the credibility of British officials.

Amy Smith, senior foreign-exchange analyst for the consulting firm IDEA, said one of the reasons the dollar eased against the yen was a belief the U.S.-Japanese trade talks were not likely to succeed and the U.S. Treasury might try to "talk the yen higher" as a means of reducing Japan's trade surplus.

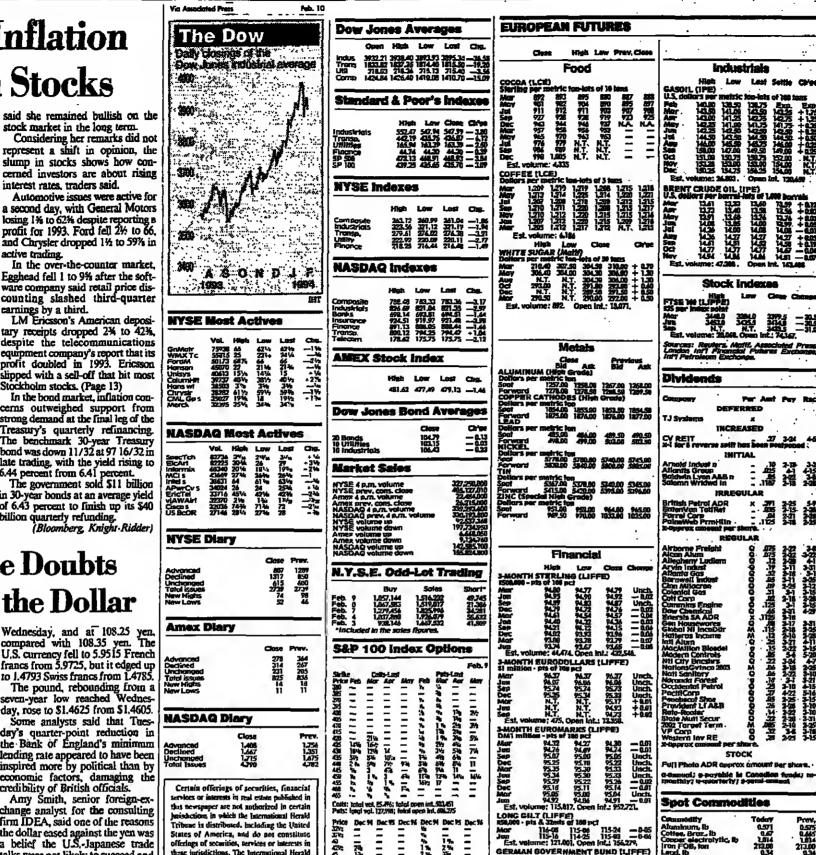

Hugh Walsh, a dealer at ING Wednesday. He said more selling orders had been triggered Thursday when the dollar fell below a support level at 1.7550 DM.

U.S. Jobless Claims Drop 47,000

WASHINGTON (Bloomberg) — The number of Americans filing new memployment claims fell last week, posting the largest decime since July, the Labor Decime since July, the Labor Department said Thursday. Initial weekly unemployment claims decreased 47,000, to 366,000, last week, in line with expectations. Economists had estimated a decrease of week, in line with expectations. Economists had estimated a decrease of 48,000, to 374,000, according to a Bloomberg survey. In the previous week, claims rose a revised 50,000, to 413,000, first recorded as an increase of 59,000, to 422,000. Last week's decline was the largest since a decrease of 56,000 claims in the week ended July 31.

Meanwhile, many U.S. economists are growing more bullish about the economy, according to a survey released Thursday. The consensus of analysis surveyed this month by Blue Chip Economic Indicators, a Sedona, Arizona, newsletter, sees the economy expanding by 3.3 percent this year. If so, it would be the fastest growth since 3.9 percent in 1988.

Strong Year for Communications Ericsson Profit Doubles

STOCKHOLM - Profit at LM Ericsson ABmore than doubled in 1993 on strong growth in the mobile telephone business and a devaluation of the Swedish

The telecommunicationsequipment company said Thurs-day it earned 3.1 billion kronor ($385 million) in 1993, compared with 1.306 billion in 1992. Sales rose to 62.9 billion kronor from 47 billion. The company plans to raise its dividend to 4.5 kronor per share from 3.5.

Despite the better-than-exted results, Ericsson's stock fell 5 kronor, to 356 kronor, amid a wave of selling on the Stockholm bourse. The Affaersvaerd-den index fell 1.8 percent, to 1,793.02, and traders said there were few people interested in. buying Swedish stocks.

Lars Ramqvist, chairman of Ericsson, said he expected even higher profit in 1994.

The 1993 earnings sport was led by a 70 percent sales increase in the company's mobile communications division, where orders have increased for nine consecutive quarters.

Ericsson said it has comered a 40 percent share of worldwide mobile analog market and holds an even greater share of the digital market. Asian markets, in particular, showed strong growth.

As evidence of that, the com-pany said Thursday it had won a mobile telephone system order from Thailand worth 150 million

LONDON - British Telecommunications PLC said third-quar-ter pretax profit after charges for layoffs was £698 million ($10 million), down I percent from the £705 million earned in the yearago period but at the top end of analysts' expectations.

The company took a £142 mil-lion charge for layoffs in the quarter ended Dec. 31, bringing total costs of layoffs in the first three quarters of its financial year to £292 million.

Analysts were expecting BT to earn between £660 million and £700 million, and the results briefly sent shares higher in London. "From our perspective, it was a great quarter," said Robert Morris, an analyst at Goldman, Sachs & Co., which had predicted pretax profit of £683 million.

Earnings got a boost from increasing telephone call volume, which analysts saw as a sign of consumer confidence in the British economy. But some of that rise in phone use was sourced by special discounts and other rate

Co. said Thursday it carned £896 million ($131 million) in 1993. turning around from a £352 million

The results reflected the compa ny's efforts to buffer itself from phinging crude oil prices by cutting costs and selling various assets. But the company said ample supplies and uncertain demand meant the outlook for oil prices remains weak. Analysts had been expecting BP to post a larger profit, with most expecting about £1.03 billion.

They are slightly disappointing results," said Philip Morgan, an analyst with Paribas Capital Markets in London. "The boost from asset sales and exchange rates is unlikely to be repeated in 1994, but this year's figures should still show a slight improvement."

For a while, investors apparently shared that sentiment, bidding the company's stock up to a 52-week high before selling off on a reassessment of longer-term earnings potential in the face of still-weak oil prices. BP shares ended down 5 pence, at 385 pence.

BP also reported that fourthquarter earnings fell 72 percent from the year-ago period, to £54 million from £193 million. Results for the quarter were reduced by a one-time £284 million charge for reorganizing of the company's European chemicals operation.

Lower Costs Help Statoil

OSLO - Norway's stateowned oil company, Statoil A/S, said Thursday that its pretax profit had risen 21 per-cent in 1993, to 12 billion kroner ($1.6 billion).

Statoil said a reduction in operating costs had compensated for the fact that a rising share of its output comes from marginally profitable fields. Net financial charges for 1993 were just over 700 million kroner, compared with 2.7 billion the previous year.

The chemicals unit posted a 1993 operating loss of £68 million but should return to profitability in 1994, the company said. Earnings in the company's exploration and production division fell 20 percent in the fourth quarter from the year-ago period, primarily because of weak crude prices.

BP sold its North Sea crude for an average $15.47 per barrel in the fourth quarter, compared with $19.59 per barrel in the fourth quarter of 1992.

Devalued CFA Causes Ouster Of SCOA Chief

PARIS - Jacques Marcelin, chairman of SCOA SA, the import-export concern, after the company dropped his pro-ject for expansion into the French large-scale distribu-tion sector, SCOA announced Thursday, Its decision was made because of the recent 50 percent devaluation of the CFA franc, a hard knock for SCOA, which is heavily involved in trading with Africa.

Tokyo Turns to Public Debt, Keeps Spending Rise to 1%

TOKYO — Japan's cabinet on hursday appears a state of the Thursday approved a 73 trillion yen ($672 billion) draft budget for the coming fiscal year, an increase of just 1 percent from the current year and one that raises public debt while reducing aid to localities. The moderate spending increase was prompted in part by the government's forecast of a sharp dethat begins April 1.

Kumagai Gumi Sets Sales Of Real Estate in Britain

Compiled by Our Staff From Dispatches
TOKYO — Kumagai Gumi Co. will sell 70 billion yea ($644 million) of overseas properties and liquidate some of its overseas real estate units before the current financial year ends March 31, its managing director, Sadatsugu Uesugi, said Thursday.

He said most of the properties sold would be those in Britain, where the real estate market is more active than in some other countries. Kumagai also has properties in the United States and the Pacific region, including Australia.

After the sales, Kumagai will have about 540 billion yen of unsold overseas properties, Mr. Uesugi said. Kumagai aggressively expanded its development business, especially overseas, in the late 1980s and has been hit by the prolonged worldwide property slump.

But separately Thursday, the construction company raised its profit forecast for the current year. It said it expected unconsolidated pretax profit of 20 billion yen, rather than the 9 billion yen estimated in November, because of its cost-cutting efforts and a decline in interest expenses. It had current profit of 29.64 billion yen in the previous year.

Its forecast of net profit was unchanged from November's esti-mate of I billion yen, but it said it expected sales to total 840 billion yen, rather than 900 billion yen.

The budget projects that tax revenue will fall 12 percent, to 53.6

trillion yen from 61.3 trillion yen projected in last year's initial budget draft. The ministry said the majority of that drop was due to a reduction in income taxes and local residence taxes announced by the govern-ment this week with the rest caused by lower tax payments from individuals and companies whose incomes were cut by Japan's severe and continuing recession.

To make up for its drop in income, the government will increase its issuance of bonds and reduce subsidies to local governments.
The Finance Ministry estimates

the government will issue nearly 14 trillion yen of construction bonds and deficit-covering bonds in the year starting April 1. Last year's budget called for issuing 8 trillion yen of bonds. The budget's dependence on bonds will be 12.7 percent, the second-highest ratio in Language part of the second-highest ratio in Language part of the 10.2 Japan's postwar history, after 19.2

The cabinet's approval of the budget came only a few hours be-fore Prime Minister Morihiro Hoton for talks with President Bill sokawa's departure for Wash

The draft budget was delayed for a mouth and a half by wrangling in parliament over the tax cut and over political reforms.

The cabinet also approved a third supplementary budget for this year, totaling 2.1 trillion year, to help implement the tax cut and other economic measures announced this week.

Digging Sydney's Metals

By Michael Richardson mational Herald Tribute

MELBOURNE -- American demand for shares in base-metal mining companies has given a powerful lift to Australian stocks in recent weeks, hut with market's key index falling 4 percent this week, analysts are wondering whether the boom can last. The rise in the All Ordinaries index over the past year has been spectacular. Its close of 2,234.3 on Thursday is 41 percent higher than the level a year ago and 21 percent above the level just six months ago. But it was down 98.5

points from the close last week. In recent weeks, analysis said. offshore money has been flowing into the market. Much of the investment was ascribed to American mutual and pension funds attracted by prospects of capital gams in resource stocks, which would benefit from an acceleration of world economic growth.

"The main driving force has been foreign money," said Peter Wetherall, director and head of research at MeIntosh Baring. "The U.S. funds have been the big swinger." He added the major concern he had about the Australian market was that commodity prices might fall if consumer demand for metals failed to catch up with supply.

Mark O'Brien, manager of Australian equity operations at AMP Investments in Sydney, said: "What we don't know is whether the Americans are going to be short-term or long-term players. Just a halt to their buying would give the market some indigestion."

Jobs Increase in Australia

CANBERRA - The unemployment rate fell in January to its lowest level in 20 months, the government announced Thursday, and employment rose for a fifth consecutive month.

The jobless rate fell to 10.6 percent from 10.7 percent the month before - contrary to many economists' forecasts of a rise - and from a peak of 11.3 percent in late 1992. Employment grew by 22.000, to a seasonally adjusted 7,874,600. The decrease in the unemployment rate was achieved even though a larger number of people were actively looking for work, the government said. The participation rate, used as an indicator of the number of people seeking jobs, rose one point, to 63.1 percent. These figures are good, very good," said John Fraser, an economist with SBC Australia, a unit of Swiss Bank Corp. "They are consistent with an economy showing clear and broad signs of strength."

In the last three months, an American investor in an Australian stock that simply kept pace with the All Ordinaries Index would have made a 25 percent gain in U.S. dollar terms. About half would have come from the rise of the market and the rest from the appreciation of the Australian dollar, Among the miners, the stock of CRA Ltd. has risen about 26 percent in the past three months. In the same period, the value of stock in MIM Holdings Ltd. jumped nearly 48 percent; Western Mining Corp., 54 percent; Comalco Ltd., 61 percent; and Pasminco Ltd., 95 percent. Western Mining reported on Thursday a 38 percent rise in net income for the six months through Dec. 31. Bloomberg Business News reported from Sydney. Most of the gains came from the company's interest in Alcoa of Australia, the aluminum producer. Its nickel operations lost money and gold revenue was little changed.

Also reflecting current weak-ness in the metals industry, which investors apparently are betting will end, Broken Hill Proprietary Co. said on Wednesday that it had accepted an average 7.6 per-cent reduction in the price of iron ore sold to Japanese steel mills. The reduction reflects the slump in the Japanese steel industry.

Many analysts, however, said the current pullback in stock prices was a healthy consolidation and that there has been little sign of panic selling. "This was a correction we had to have," said John Bowie Wilson, director of Hambros Equities Ltd. in Sydney.

"Made in Japan" is two years behind schedule. One year was lost in the process of assembling teams of academie and corporate researchers and obtaining 200 mil-lion yen ($1.8 million) from 34 companies to fund the project.

Once research began, the problem became one of reconciling in-consistencies between two groups that traditionally have had little contact. Mr. Shimada recalled that the corporate side said, "'Please don't refer to the fact that we've had any problems with American competitors."

He added, "We were operating under the assumption that problems didn't exist."

The collapse of the economic buhhle further complicated efforts to sort out the structural problems afflicting Japanese industry. Al-though scholars by the late 1980s had a sense of problems to come, many in industry were slow to acknowledge the way the buhhle had distorted their performance. Many hasked in the analysis of "Made in America," which heaped praise on Japanese business practices such as teamwork, in-house training, and patient capital facilitating research and development spending.

VALENCIENNES, France -Bernard Tapie, the flamboyant businessman and politician who owns the soccer team, was placed under judicial investigation Thursday in connection with the bribery case involving Olympique Mar-seille and ordered to resign as the club's chairman by April 20. Judge Bernard Beffy, who is investigating the alleged attempt by Marseille to bribe opponents to lose a key French league match, also placed Tapie under investigation for interfering with witnesses. Being placed under investigation in France is the equivalent of being charged with a crime in other judicial systems.

Tapie, who was released oo bail of 250,000 francs ($42,000). stormed out of the judge's chambers "almost without waiting for the magistrate to finish reading the indictment," a justice official said. An official statement by the public prosecutor said Tapic, the selfmade millionaire and protégé of President François Mitterrand who

In Marseille, angry fans gathered at the club grounds to protest the judge's decision.

Tapie claimed that Beffy "wants to destroy Olympique Marseille."

Harding Asks Court To Bar Hearing and Sues for $20 Million

The U.S. figure skating champion submitted the documents as part of a $20 million lawsuit filed against the U.S. Olympic Committee. Harding is seeking to prevent the USOC from holding a hearing Tuesday in Oslo on whether she should be forced off the team for her alleged role in the attack on rival skater Nancy Kerrigan.

A hearing on the lawspit was sched-uled for Friday in Clackamas County Circuit Court in nearby Oregon City, where the suit was filed.

To back up the lawsuit, filed late Wednesday, Harding's attorneys submitted 67 pages of supporting documents Thursday, including a proposed temporary restraining order to prevent the USOC bearing and affidavits from Harding and her coach, Diane Rawlin-

Harding said in her affidavit that she had worked her entire life toward the goal of competing in the Winter Olym-pic Games, which begin Saturday in Lillehammer.

"I have done nothing that would warrant my removal from the U.S. Olympic team and I would be irreparably harmed if I were not allowed to compete," she said

She said she could not afford to pay the expenses of attorneys and witnesses who would testify on her behalf at the USOC hearing in Oslo. Rawlinson said in her affidavit that Neither Kerrigan, who arrived in Lil-lehammer on Thursday, nor Harding are expected to take part in Saturday's opening ceremony, a spokesman for the U.S. team said.

The 16-page lawsuit filed by Harding's attorneys claims her 20-year dream of winning an Olympic gold medal would be wrongfully and unfairly dashed by any attempt to remove her from the figure skating team.

But the portion that undoubtedly means the most to the embattled 23year-old skater is the request for the temporary restraining order and preliminary injunction preventing the

> The lawsoit contends the USOC action violates her rights as a member of the figure skating association and amounts to double jeopardy because the is still subject to the USFSA inquiry. The figure skating group has ordered Harding to appear at a disciplinary hearing and has given her until March 7

The suit also claims the USOC lacks jurisdiction to take any action based on conduct that occurred before she became a member of the Olympic team.

TILLEHAMMER, Norway — "Your witness, Mr. Mason." "Your honor, I call ... Juan Antonio Samaranch." The judge bengs his gavel to hush the spectators. Right now it looks bleak. Everyone thinks she's guilty of some-

The only one who can get Tonya Harding out of this is Penry Mason, that hero of the American television courtroom. "Mr. Samaranch, you are president of the International Olympic Committee," Mason begins. "And so I ask you: Are you trying to win the Nobel Peace Prize?"

I ask you again: Are you or are you not now devoting your life to winning the Nobel Prize for Peace?"

This is the part where Perry Mason destroys everyone he calls to the witness stand. No one knows why he does it. It never involves the the witness stand. No one knows why he does it. It hever involves the most important evidence. A lot of the witnesses have nothing to do with the crime. So far, his examinations have revealed only that the public, press and Olympic reactions have been sillier than all of the public, press and Olympic reactions have been sillier than all of the public press and Olympic reactions have been sillier than all of the public press and Olympic reactions have been sillier than all of the public press and Olympic reactions have been sillier than all of the public press and Olympic reactions have been sillier than all of the public press and Olympic reactions have been sillier than all of the public press and Olympic reactions have been sillier than all of the public press and Olympic reactions have been sillier than all of the public press. things Jeff Gillooly hired with (allegedly) George Steinbrenner's but you and I can money, and that almost everyone is profitting from the ensuing Perry says. "Way to go with Steinbrenner," Paul says, smiling.

"In my time as owner," says Steinbrenner, squirming, because he was expecting to answer questions about the $10,000 he reportedly donated to Harding, "the Yankees have won two World Scries and become the most lucrative ..."

Perry cuts him off, "And you've fired how many managers?" Tonya's the one on trial here."

"Isn't it right that in the 17 years that you weren't banished for notes has been building against her. Her own husband — rather, ex-husband — has turned on her. > He takes on only the most impossible cases. The evidence is always stacked against his clients like the news cameras at Harding's practice rink. If it were up to the public, his clients would be sent to the gas chamber without a trial. As it is, the district attorney, Hamilton Berger, never seems to learn from his mistakes. He approaches every case with an arrogance bordering on the danger-

> A good lawyer identifies that arrogance. He knows that nobody is innocent. You're looking down your nose at his client? You're better than she is? Let's just put you on the witness stand, where you have to tell the truth, and then we'll see what you're all about. That's what most of Perry Mason's trials come down to. He makes every accuser feel as low as they've made his client feel. He evens the playing field. Of course, with 10 minutes left you're no closer to believing his client will get off than you were in the

Peary says, "Where is that witness?"
Paul says: "My man in Portland has been looking up and down the West Coast. Perry, he swears there is no witness Perry looks over at his client. The ice queen is dying for a smoke.

Is Mason looking down at his watch? You can't tell; his arm is out of the picture. But you and everyone watching knows there are only seven minutes left as be grimaces a smile at Paul. He turns and approaches the bench saying, "Your honor, the defense calls..."

Does he call Gillooly, the ex-husband who has implicated Harding? Does he call the bodyguard? The alleged assailant? Is there a vital go-between of whom we haven't heard? Maybe he calls one of the dozens of people profiting from the mess.

The whole developing scandal has been turned into a made-for-television movie, with commercials four times an hour. Public opinion polls show that more and more Americans believe Harding hould not compete in Lillehammer, and the Olympic community has clearly been sensitive to these polls. In TV-reduced terms, there are only seven minutes of airtime until Harding's status is to be reviewed by a U.S. Olympic Committee panel in Oslo on Tuesday. They should let the TV movie play itself out. NDEED, a good lawyer should put the Olympic people on the stand and reveal the motives driving their judgment of Harding not to bury them, but simply to learn the truth.

From the beginning, they've been wishing that she would simply disappear to save them from negative publicity. At the same time, they are ultimately going to pocket that publicity in the form of higher TV ratings translated into more television revenue. In the past, they have arbitrarily applied the rules of sportsmanship to some athletes and not to others. Is their goal to avoid the downs of publicity, or are they interested in the Olympic ideal of truth? If they were held under the same unsparing light as Harding, would you entrust them with the decision?

In that same light, would you believe her ex-husband? Even if Harding is charged in the conspiracy, she has not been proved guilty. The only truth right now is we don't know the truth. Maybe she found out afterward and was too scared and depressed to come forward because she knew she wouldn't be believed. It's unlikely, but maybe she still isn't sure how everything happened. In an interactive, TV-movie world based on ratings and applause, it's just not fair to turn off the set before the final act. If Perry Mason has taught us anything about justice, it's that when the accusers are truly revealed, you find yourself rooting for the accused they will await a single Norwegian. His name is Stein Gruben, and he, like the surroundings, will fall out of the sky.

He is a ski jumper. Gruben has been the understudy to Ole Gunnar Fidjestol, the 1987 world champion, who had been practicing his jumps with a torch held high in his right hand. But Fidjestol was injured in a practice leap on Thursday and now, to all the world, it will be Gruben who will embody Norway. He is going to ski down the mountain and jump off, throst-ing the Olympic flame out before him.

"I was a little bit reluctant that the torch should be used in this way," said its designer, Bjorn F. Magnussen, a professor of thermodynamics at the Norwegian Institute of Technology. "It was not designed to be used in this way."

He meant it for the 7,050 participants who carried it 8,000 kilometers across Norway during the last three months, from the breadth of an oil platform (via helicopter) in the North Sea to an island off the country's most northern point (by plane).

From Gruben's soaring height, the valley will gain in majesty, while sprawing Lake Mjosa might shrink to the size of an ice rink. Those watching from the ground will be surrounded by hills that are comfortable and gradual, with no challenging peaks in sight of Lillehammer, but 4,850 kilometers of cross-country trails in-

When 250,000 Norwegians applied for the 30,000 tickets available to watch the Olympic biathlou and cross-country events, organizers decided to open the courses to anyone willing to ski or snowshoe through the woods. On those days, the troils of Norwegian folklore will seem to come out an masse in their bright parkas and bobbed hats, bigger and more handsome than in the fairy tales.

The Games, which end Feb. 27, are threatened by the shadow of the American figure skaters Nancy Kerrigan and Tonya Harding. It is mostly a false threat - nothing when compared with the real one that led to the attack on Perhaps their shadow will obscure the achievements of other athletes. More likely, even if the U.S. Olympic committee allows Harding to skate, the sensational details of the attack will also gobble up whatever the women do on the ice. Their moment might already have passed - unless Kerrigan is able to take the next step, gathering herself to win the gold medal. These would then become her Olympics.

The field could survive without Harding and Kerrigan. It features former professionals making figure-skating comebacks, among them Brian Boitano, Viktor Petrenko and Katarina Witt. The hockey competition has never been tighter. In most other sports, the Norwegianswho used to dominate the Winter Games have experienced a renaissance, just in time for a normally store people to let out emotions built up for six years. They understand these sports, and their nation might win more medals than

In practical terms, Lillehammer will be remembered as the first of the staggered Games, coming two years after the Olympics in Albert-ville, France. From now on, the Winter Games will take place in the middle of the four-year, cycle between Summer Olympics. More significantly, organizers hope they will

Under pressure from environmentalists and the public, organizers agreed to institute con-trols while developing the venues. Fines of up to $10,000 helped protect trees. The positioning of the Hamar speed-skating hall — resembling the hull of an overturned Viking ship — was changed to protect a bird sanctuary. The Gjovik hockey arena was built inside a mountain, with the excavated rock shoring up the nearby coastline. And bullets will be retrieved from the histhlon course.

It remains to be seen whether such initiatives are maintained in future Olympics by the pragmatic IOC, but environmentalists say this should only be the beginning.

In each host country, the Olympics become a celebration of everything that came before. From the heavens, Lillehammer looks as peaceful and safe as did Sarajevo 10 years ago when it held the Winter Games.

Houses in the town descend like steps to the bottom of the hill, the edge of a frozen lake and a colony of 18 tents and a pen of reindeer. The tents have been erected by the Sami people, who believe theirs to be the first culture in Norway. They live mostly to the north, with trucks and satellite dishes outside their homes. It is only in the last generation that they have regained the right to teach their own language in school. Here, they have created a temporary village for the world to visit.

Last Friday, two of the reindeer escaped. One of them climbed the residential hill into central Lillehammer, where the animal roamed the pedestrian walkway, mingling with the guests. It was chased through a tunnel and out onto the lake, where men on snowmobiles could not catch it.

Eventually, a bell tied to the neck of another reindeer bared it back to the Sami village and its residents dressed in bright robes, bonnets and boots made of reindeer fur.

On Saturday, the Olympic flame will traverse all this in the hand of a Norwegian. If the wind is strong enough - who knows? - it might land in yesterday.

The controversial interview in which Norwegian skier Vegard Ulvang criticized the International Olympic Committee and its president, Juan Antonio Samaranch, was recorded a month ago, a spokesman for the Lillehammer Olympic Organizing Committee said Thursday. Ulvang is scheduled to swear the Olympic oath on behalf of all athletes at Saturday's opening ceremony. He apologised to Samaranch at a private meeting Thursday, and the IOC's director general, François Carrard, said, Our relationship with LOOC is perfect." The full transcript of the interview showed that Ulvang had been asked about the IOC and Samaranch right at the end of a long interview and had also qualified his reply. "He is very upset and depressed," said the organizing committee, spokesman, Odd Ustad. "He has been through a tough period." Downhill skier Franco Colturi was dropped from Italy's team after testing positive for anabolic steroids, the Italian Athletic Feder-

SPORTS WINTER OLYMPICS

Faces Old and New to Watch in the Norwegian Woods

By Christopher Clarey Special to the Herald Tribune

LILLEHAMMER Norway --- It will be akin to a soccer match in Italy, a sumo tournament in Japan or a basketball game in Indiana. It will look right and ring true. Norway is made for the Winter Olympics, and for the first time in 42 years the Winter Games have made their way to Norway, home of endless evergreens and two short words: ski and slalom.

While the world watches these Norwegian woods, the world's best skiers, skaters and sliders will try to benefit from the windfall born of the International Olympic Committee's desire to keep the Summer Games from overshadowing their smaller winter offspring.

Only two years have passed since Winter Olympians last congregated, in the French Alps, and many of those who captured hearts, minds and medals there will be striving for repeat performances in the higher latitudes and lower altitudes of central Norway.

Among the names that should ring a mountain cowbell: Kjetil Andre Aamodt, Bonnie Blair, Surya Bonaly, Marc Girardelli, Viktor Petrenko, Vreni Schneider, Vegard Ulvang, Pernilla Wiberg, and, of course, Alberto (La Bomba) Tomba, the Italian star who felt destined for glory in Calgary (Alberta) in 1988 and Albertville (make that Alberto-ville) in 1992. but who has had a harder time claiming manifest destiny in Lillehammer.

Tomba could still win medals, however, along with a few ghosts from Olympics even longer ago. A new International Skating Union rule has opened the door to prodigal sons and daughters from the professional figure-skating ranks, Brian Boitano, the American who lobhied vigorousty for the opportunity, will be joined in the Hamar skating arena by three other gold-medal winners from Calgary: Germany's Katarina Witt and Russia's Ekaterina Gordeeva and Sergei Grinkov. For those feel-ing nostalgic for 1984 and much happier times in Sarajevo, there will be the consum dancers Jayne Torvill and Christopher Dean of

The skaters will not be bothered by the weather, but it could affect those competing outdoors. Lillehammer has not had this much snow in February since 1951, and more is predicted. Not that the hosts, who have suffered through several light winters in recent years, are complaining,

"It's a nice problem for us to have," said Svein Mundal, chief of the race committee at Kvitfjell, site of the Alpine speed events.

A look at the medal cootenders in each sport:

Alpine Skling

One woman and two men have a realistic shot at the unprecedented feat of winning an Alpine medal in three consecutive Olympics: Anita Wachter of Austria, Franck Piccard of France and Tomba, the effervescent Italian who has curbed some of his late-night habits but lost oone of his bravado.

Long the best technical skier in the world, Tomba always saves his best for Olympic years. He won both slalom races in Calgary and re-peated in the giant slalom in 1992. In the last month, he has returned to peak form. Those who could spoil Tomba's party in the slalom include Norway's Finn Christian Jagge, Austria's Thomas Stangassinger and Jure Kosir, a young Slovene who moonlights as a rap singer.

The man to watch in every event is Aamodt. the overall World Cup leader and front man for the group of Norwe an salers who call them selves the attacking Vikings. Two other dangerous all-arounders are Günther Mader of Austria and Girardelli of Luxembourg, the fivetime World Cup overall champion who broke his Olympic hex with a silver in 1992.

Io the downhill, Patrick Ortlieb, the burly Austrian who won gold oo the serpenting course in Albertville, could repeat. The bad news for him is that this course is said to be tailor-made for yet another Norwegian, Atle Skaardal. Tommy Moc of the United States could break through in the downhill or super-giant slaton, which will be held on his 24th birthday.

Woman to watch include Deborah Compagooni of Italy in the giant slalom, Katja Seizinger of Germany in the speed events. Wiberg of Sweden in just about everything and the venerable Schneider of Switzerland, who was invisihle in Albertville hut has returned to top form

The men's and ice-dancing events will have the strongest fields in history. Petrenko, the Ukrainian who is the 1992 Olympic champion, perhaps has a slight edge, based on his victory in Skate America and his impressive performance in Copenhagen. But he will need to call oo all his resources to bold off Boitano and Kurl Browning of Canada, the four-time world champion. Kerrigan appears to be completely recovered from the blow to her knee, but the truth is that she has never skated cleanly in a major international competition. If she can rise above her past, she has an excellent chance at gold and a ifetime's supply of endorsement opportunities.

If not, the spoils will probably go to Oskana Baiul of Ukraine, the defending world champion, or Bonaly of France, the European champi-on. Both have flaws: Bainl is ill at ease with combination jumps, and Bonaly still lacks artistry. Witt, the two-time gold medalist from the former East Germany, whose jumps are no match for her younger competitors, will be and Dean barely won in Copenhagen, and their fortunate to finish in the top eight.

On the sicturesque track near Lillehammer, they are likely to do well again, Germany's Georg Hack! and the doubles team of Stefan Krausse and Jan Behrendt are back to defend their titles.

But this time, the Americans could finally transform the luge competition into a multilingual event. Although the men's gold-medal favorite is Austria's Markus Prock, both Wender Suckow and Duncan Kennedy of the U.S. team are capable of winning their country's first lage medal. If they falter, their teammate Cammy Myler, who won the last World Cup event of the season, could break through in the women's event. Washington Post Service LILLEHAMMER, Norway - She had no inkling of what had happened until she sat up and noticed the blood spattered over her racing

Before that, she was lying on her back on her luge sled, traveling upward of 75 miles per hour down the course in Winterberg, Germany, one of the fastest in the world.

About halfway down, she caught a glimpse of a man trying to get off the course two turns away. She though; nothing of it not even when she "felt the impact."

Then? "Then I just remember hearing a thud."

"And I thought," she remembered, " What happened? Why am i stowing down? She wasn't knocked off her sled. Only at the bottom of the track did the American luger Bethany Calcaterra-McMahon learn the borrifying truth: The dull, half-inch-wide numbers of her sled had severed the leg of the German team's head coach. Sepp Lenz, below the knee. Lenz, who was sweeping snow off the track between training runs, had not heard the "all clear" call that was sounded down the track before Calcaterra-McMahon began her run. "As I found later, he's deaf in one ear," Calcaterra-MaMaison said. By the time she pushed out of the starting gate and began rattling down the course, Lenz nonced her - but too late. As Lenz scrambled to get off the track, his spiked sines betrayed him. He fell, Calcaterra-McMahon shot by. As Lenz lay there, his leg cut clean, he pushed the button on the walkie-talkie he carried to communicate with his team and said: "It was my fault. My foot has been cut off. It was my fault. Get help."

Almost tirree mooths have passed. And Calcaterra-McMahon, 20, sat now in a cramped interview from at the Winter Olympics and tried hard to act unaffected. How much she cried or shook with fear or reconsidered her participation in luging, she won't exactly say, She consides that she did all of that, but talking to her teammates and her stepfather, a psychiatrist in Waterbury. Connecticut, helped.

Knowing Lenz had absolved her of any blame was crucial, too -- especially when she learned the next day that doctors had been unable to reattach his leg in emergency surgery.

That was bad news. The good news? Calcaterra-McMahon, breaking into a grin, said she and two of ber U.S. luge teammates saw Lenz at the athletes' village here and they found, firsthand, that word of his remarkable recovery was Lenz, who was 59 when the accident occurred, was fitted with a prosthesis just three weeks after the accident. A member of the U.S. Luge Federation saw him at a World Cup event less than two months after the accident and he was back at work, walking with a cane, telling the American, "Hey. Don't worry about me. I'm fine. Really. I'm fine."

"Even when he was in the ambulance being rushed to the hospital," Calcaterra-McMahon recalled, "people said he was asking, "How is the girl." Is she all right? Is she O.K.?"

And when she saw Lenz in the athletes' village this week?

"He said, 'We've got to go dancing,' " Calcaterra-McMahon said, laughing,

Much like Lenz, Calcaterra-McMahon had to summon courage after the incident. In her mind she knew "it was a fluke accident --something that's never happened before." But she also concedes, "I'm oot going to say it wasn't hard afterward. It was."

During a typical run, lugers are flattened by pressure up to seven times the force of gravity - twice the g-forces that astronauts feel on takeoff. In addition to high speeds, they cannot see what is happening as they fly down twisting courses because lifting your head — even though it's a natural thing to do heading into a diabolical curve or switchback turn — can add three- or four-hundredths of a second to your time, which can be the difference between victory and defeat.

Although lugers who crash break bones now and then, a far more common problem is the burns they get when their limbs scrape against plastic fiber of their bodysuits. Still, Calcaterra-McMahon denies being haunted by any new thoughts about the inherent danger of inging.

"Serious accidents are rare," she says. "I

But that didn't make what happened to Lenz

any easier to get over.

Three hours after the accident - after she'd thrown away her blood-spattered racing suit and found another, after U.S. coach Wolfgang Schadler had duct-taped a crack in her sied and realigned the steering — Calcaterra-McMahon was back on the track, forced to press on because the next day's race was the last Olym-

"I was second on the team, but I was only one point ahead of the girl in third," she said. "If I hadn't competed, it would have been up to a discretionary board to put me on the team or not. But I didn't want it to come down to that."

pic qualifier of the season and her spot on the U.S. team was tenuous.

This is only Calcaterra-McMahon's first winter on the senior circuit, after all. Though she has four U.S. junior titles — winning her first at age 15 — she hadn't built up any raft of ecomplishments at the highest level.

So she kept training that day. When she was alone, she shook and cried, according to a teammate. But on the track she was determined. "I wanted so bad to have that Olympic experience," she says.

When the race finally came the next day, she finished fifth - her best World Cup finish of the season. She made the Olympic team.

Then, said a U.S. Luge official, "I'm told she locked herself in her room for 20 minutes and cried, just cried."

If Calcaterra-McMahon were to win a medal here, it would be an upset. But, she said with a laugh, she knows exactly what she would try to do if she did. She would run off and look for Lenz and tell him what had happened. Then she'd probably take him up on his offer. She'd ask him for a victory dance.

"I think I would," Calcaterra-McMahon says. "I think that's exactly what I'd do."...

Wolfgang Hoppe, who has won two golds and two silvers in previous Olympics, was re-cently dismissed from the German Army because he had failed to disclose links with the Stasi, the former East German state secruity police. But Hoppe will still drive in Norway, along with Harald Czudaj, who disclosed his Stasi links before the 1992 Games

Ski Jumping and Nordic Combined

Four men have soared above the rest this season: Espen Bredesen of Norway, Jens Weissflog of Germany, Noriaki Kasai of Japan and the apple-cheeked Andreas (Andie) Gold-berger of Austria. Jaroslav Sakala, a Czech, is also dangerous, particularly on the large hill. The Norwegians and the Austrians are the favorites in the team competition. The Finns, who have won a total of six gold medals in wno nave won a total of six gott installs in jumping at the last three Olympics, are no longer reigning supreme, largely because the teenege phenom Toni Nieminen, a double gold medalist in Albertville, lost his touch and eventually his place on the Finnish Olympic team. As for Nordic combined, that daunting marriage of normal-hill ski jumping and a 15-kilometer cross-country ski race, there is only one name to remember: Kenji Ogiwara of Japan. He could be the surest bet in Lillehammer, largely because he is an excellent jumper.

Cross-Country Skilng and Blathlen

The Norwegians swept the five men's events in 1992, but a repeat performance is unlikely, in large part because Vladimir Smirnov of Ka-zakhstan has been the dominant skier this season. But Smirnov, who lives in Sweden, will still have his hands full with his Norwegian friends Bjorn Dachlie and Ulvang, who will get enormous support from the vocal home crowd. In the women's events, expect lots more medals from three skiers who were dominant in Albertville: Lyubov Egorova and Elena Vialbe of Russia and Stefania Belmondo of Italy. In the biathlon, which has long been the domain of Germans and Russians, the French and Canadians could be doing some celebrating. Patrice Bailly-Sains of France is a tenta-tive favorite in the men's races, and France's Anne Briand and Canada's dynamic Myriam Bedard are two of the favorites in the women's Bailly-Salins's principal rivals will be Sergei Tarasov of Russia and three Germans: Sven Fischer, Ricco Gross and perhaps Mark Kirchner, who won two golds and a silver in 1992 but has struggled of late. Briand and Bedard will have to contend with Nathatic Santer of Italy and Antje Harvey of Germany, who won a gold and two silvers in Albertville.

ice Hockey

Since it formed the core of the gold-medal-winning Unified Team in 1992, Russia's vaunted hockey program has had to codure adminis trative infighting, economic hardship and nearly total turnover (given that the National Hockey League in North America has no hardcarrency problem).

But the talent pool runs deep in their trou bled nation, and the Russians - with their superior stickhandling and speed — still managed to win the 1993 world championships and could capture another gold in Lillehammer. Although none of the Russian players have Olympic experience, their feisty coach, Viktor Tikhonov, has plenty. Tikhonov, 65, began coaching the Soviet national team in the mid-1970s and did a masterly job with his young team in Albertville, although he was dismissed after failing to win the subsequent world title.

If the Russians fail to gel, the Swedes, led by the 20-year-old center Peter Forsberg, have the best chance to take the gold. The bronze could go to the Canadians or the Czechs, who could run into their former teammates from Siovakia in the quarterfinals.

Speed Skating

If all goes according to plan on the fast track in the stadium shaped like an inverted Viking ship, the sprints will belong to the Americans, the middle distances to the Dutch and the long distances to the Norwegians and the Germans. Blair, who has already won three golds for the United States, could repeat her sweep of the 500- and 1,000-meter events in Albertville. Gunda Niemann of Germany again looks un-touchable in the 3,000- and 5,000-meter races.

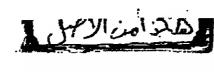

For the men, the big question is whether Dan Jansen of the United States can finally put an end to his Olympic travails. Jansen, who fell twice in Calgary after learning of his sister's death, fell victim to excessive expectations in Albertville. This will most certainly be his final chance to live up to his talent. The men's distance events will be sketed to the sound of wild cheering from the Norwegian and the Dutch fans, who follow the sport like nobody else. The best chance for the Dutch is Falko Zandstra in the 1,500-meter event. The Norwegians are counting on Johann Olav Koss to bring home gold in the 5,000- and 10,000-meter Short-track, which made its medal debut in Albertville, has added two more races for 1994: the men's 500 meters and women's 1,000 meters. Once again, the Americans, the Canadians, the Chinese and the South Koreans will be the skaters to beat. A few names to remember: Cathy Turner, the American who won gold in 1992; Lee Joon Ho, a South Korean who is favored to win the men's 1,000, and Wilf O'Reilly, a British sprinter.

Freestyle Siding

Only the mogul sloers got the chance to compete for official medals in Albertville. This time, the aerialists also will have the honor. Donna Weinbrecht of the United States, who has made a remarkable comeback from major knee surgery, is a good bet to repeat in the women's moguls. The colorful French star Edgar Grospiron is a slightly less prohibitive favorite to repeat in the men's event, where his teammate Olivier Cotte and the Canadaian Jean-Luc Brassard are larking.

The aerials, one of the most spectacular winter sports, should cast some well-deserved light on Lina Cheriszova, who is favored to win the women's event and give the former Soviet republic of Uzbekistan its first Olympic gold. The men's event should be dominated by the Cansdians Nicoles Fontaine and Philippe LaRoche, although Trace Worthington of the United States could sneak in for a medal if he is not hampered by a fragile knee.

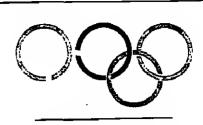

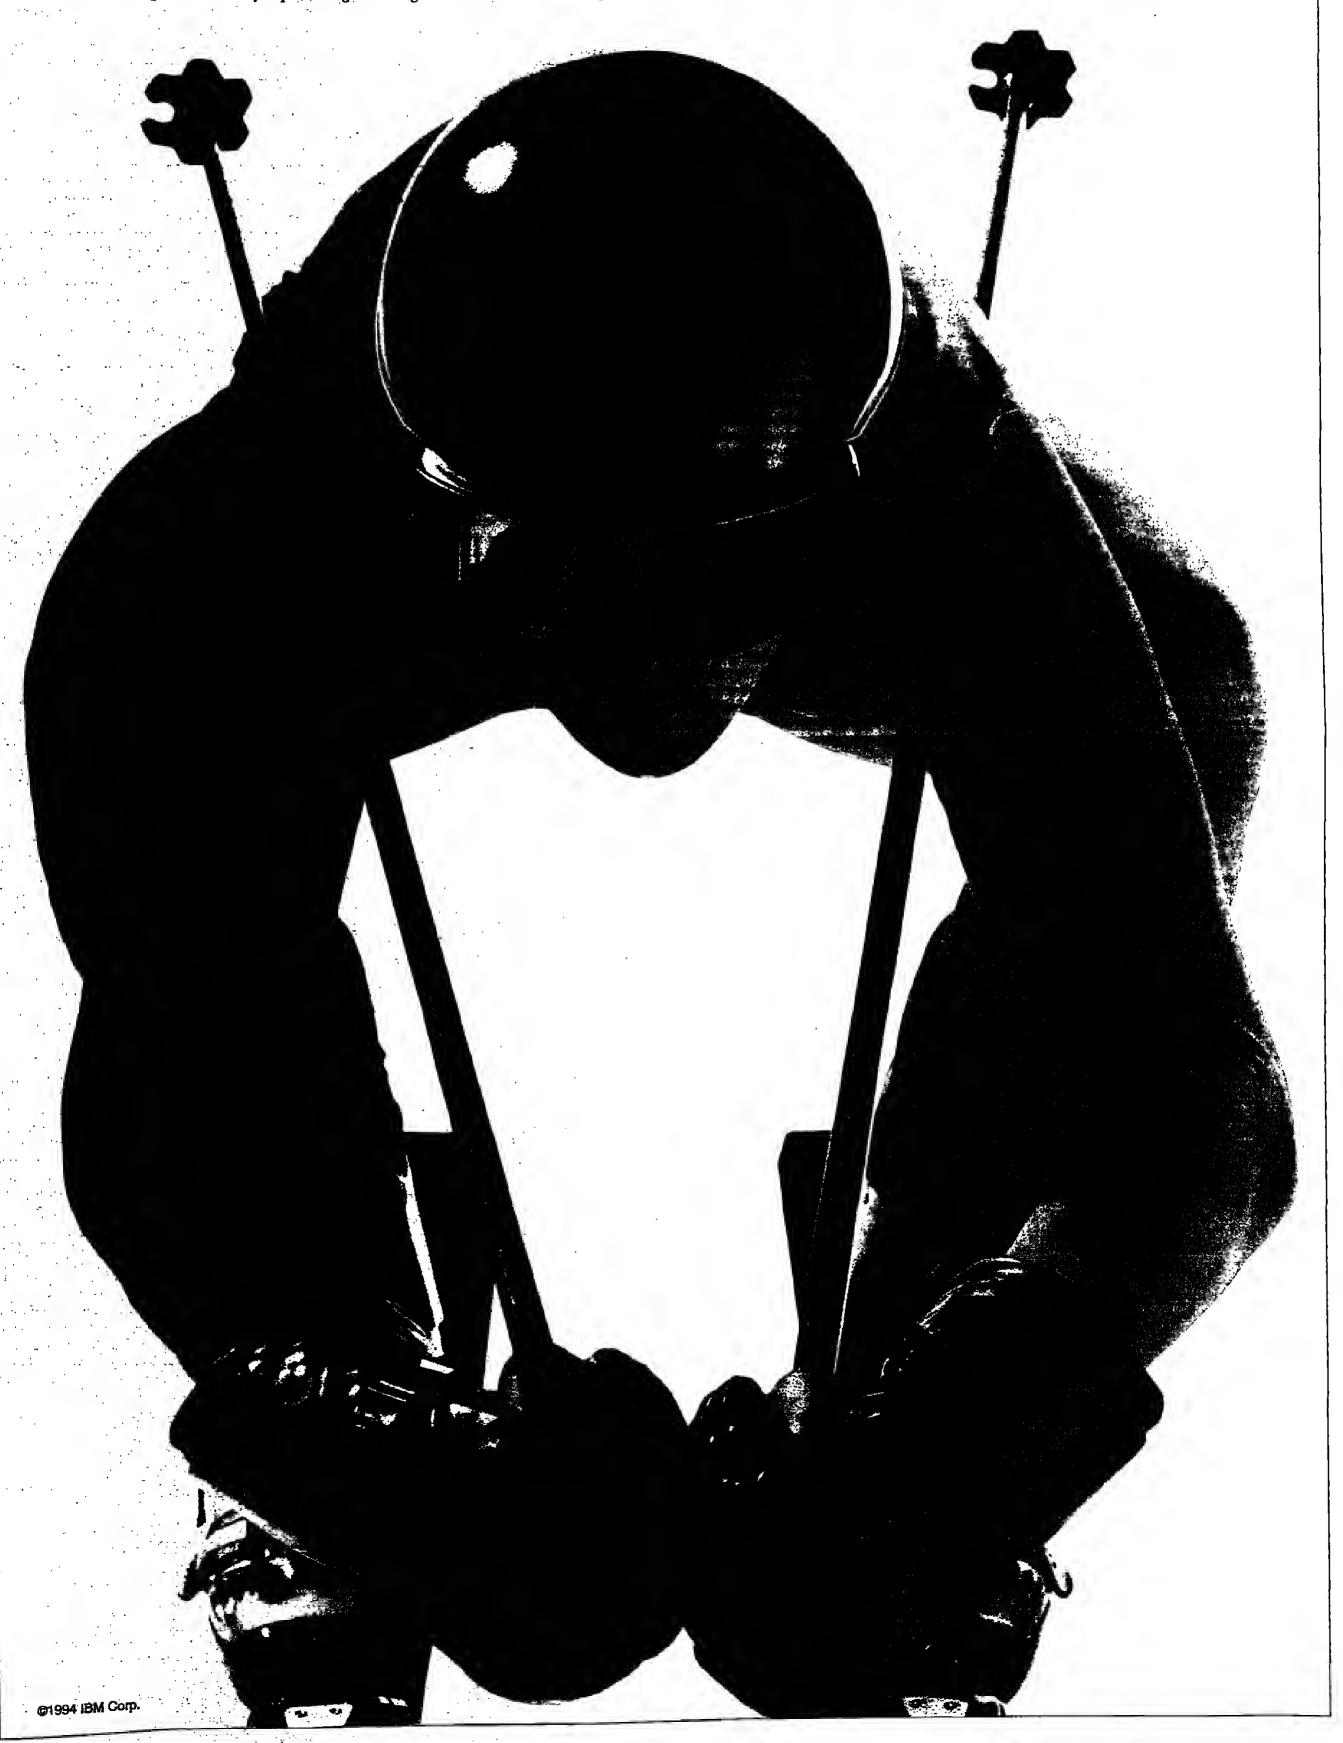

GOLD, SILVER, BRONZE. AND BLUE.

IBM has played a supporting role in the Olympic Games since 1960. But this time it's different. More than just providing hardware, systems software and support, we helped plan, design, integrate and manage the 1994 Olympic Winter Games. IBM-based systems helped the Olympic Organizing Committee optimize a billion-dollar investment by simplifying inventory control, stat gathering, ticketing and lodging. And, at a touch of a screen, journalists can gain access to all the results and the relevant background information. Further evidence of how we're helping to open the 1994 Olympic Winter Games to the world.

B ERLIN — When city planners here envision the Berlin of the future, one of their most vivid images is of the stately American Embassy that would be rebuilt on its former site next to the Branden-

Germans and Americans alike expect the building to be an anchor of the new Berlin and a symbol of the United States' determination to remain a major force in Europe. It will be perhaps the most important embassy building the United States will construct in this decade, and the site at Pariser Platz, adjacent not only to the Brandenburg Gate but also to the Reichstag, the once and future home of the German parliament, is arguably the most desirable in

But the recent arrival of a new American amhassador with a penchant for challenging established views has sent shudders of fear and disbelief through architectural and city planning circles here. The ambassador, Richard C. Holbrooke, has made it known that he is considering huilding the new embassy somewhere other than Pariser

"Nowhere can you achieve what you can achieve at Pariser Platz. said Rudiger Patzschke, one of many Berlin architects who are alarmed by the ambassador's posi-tion, "Plenty of countries would love to have their embassies there. It just wouldn't make sense for the Americans 10 go anywhere else. If they find the site too small or the rules too restrictive, they could put just their reception rooms and a few offices there. But to abandon the site altogether would not make Holhrooke said: "It is our hope that we will be able to build at Pariser Platz, but we haven't made a final decision yet because we don't have the final German specifications. If the Germans can accommodate us, we'll end up there. But we are looking at alternate sites, and if we are faced with dealbreaking specifications, we'll go

One of the factors to consider is that Pariser Platz is an ensemble site, we could have a free-standing building, which in some ways would be preferable."

Some architects here have suggested that Holbrooke is in effect bluffing and that his search for alternate sites may be a charade. They suspect that his true goal is simply to scare city officials into giving the United States more control over the design of its Pariser

The French government is also planning to build a new embassy on land it owns at Pariser Platz. and Britain expects to build on an adjacent plot. City officials have imposed a series of height and design restrictions intended to assure that the plaza regains a measure of its original grandeur.

Among the alternative sites Holbrooke has visited is one on Alexandemiatz in the eastern part of the city. The site, owned by the Radisfrom the Berlin Cathedral.

Holbrooke recently showed both sites to the architect I. M. Pei, who was in Berlin on a visit after attending the inauguration of his newly designed halls at the Louvre in Paris. The ambassador said later that Pei bad advised him to consider the Pariser Platz site favorably.

"He said that a very great city needs a center, and that as the new Berlin emerges. Pariser Platz will probably be the most important location in the city in a psychological sense," Holbrooke said.

Pei also reportedly said he did not want to be considered as a possible architect of the new em-

A century ago, Pariser Platz was known as "the kaiser's reception room." It lies on the edge of the sprawling Tiergarten, once a royal hunting ground and now a magnet for cyclists and sunbathers. The neoclassical architecture that once dominated the plaza was meant to symbolize Germany's commitment to the democratic ideals of ancient Holbrooke said he hoped to have a final decision by the end of this month. "Whatever we decide is going to have a long-term impact on the city. We don't want to make a site. We'd be part of a cluster of mistake."

A Family Life on Both Sides of 'Color Line'

By Mary Ann French Washington Post Service

WASHINGTON — Here and now, VV little by little, a taboo is being bro-ken. Modern-day prejudice among black Americans, one against another, is being exposed. Irrational biases based on skin color are being aired. African Americans of all the many bues created by miscegenation - whether forced or not - are finding a way to question someone else's defi-nition of them.

Heretofore, however mixed, and in whatever proportions, the "one-drop rule" prevailed. One drop of black blood in your veins determined how you were classified in this American apartheid. It applied across the board, from the redboned to the blueblack, which according to the author Shirles Taylor Haizlip's color chart includes: "honey, caramel, ivory, peaches-and-cream, mahogany, coal blue, red bronze, amber, tar, rhiney, snow, chocolate, coffee, ebony, clear, bright, light, dark, alabaster, tan, rosy, molasses, toffee, taffy, cafe-au-lait, nutmeg, leafy, high yellow, paper-bag-tan,

All those skin colors were seen as the same - whether in the eyes of Jim Crow or Uncle Sam.

We've been socialized to say we're only black," says Haizlip, who has written the confounding story of her Washington family and life on both sides of the color line. It is titled "The Sweeter the Juice," after the old saying ("The blacker the berry . . .") She took the book — her first — to 10 publishers and got nine offers. Forty production companies are after the movie rights. All this stir over what Haizlip says is

"a dirty little, but not quite so secret, thing,"
"We've been brainwashed," says Haizlip. "White Americans and black Americans just accepted it as something almost handed down from God, you know, or on the mountain, with Moses, without remembering, without thinking that it was just a law made hy people, by white people, for what-ever their political or socioeconomic reasons at the time."

As for Haizlip's own coloring, she says she is often mistaken in her travels for white. Her skin is the sort of pale that looks as though its pigment has somehow been removed, leaving a visual sense of loss. Her reddish-brown hair, by her own description, is "not quite nappy," but it tangled, knotted easily, and required a light pressing with a hot comb.

Some of Haizlip's discomfort with the lighter end of the color spectrum, she ex-plains, is related to the dark skin of her father - the Reverend Julian Taylor - and that of her grandfather — the Reverend William Taylor Sr., founder of Washington's Florida Avenue Baptist Church, She lancies herself sharing the burdens and joys of their coloring, even to the point of seeing a brown face when she spies herself in a mirror. "I see on two levels," says Hazzlip.

"through the eyes and the heart."
In her book, which is subtitled "A Family demoir in Black and White" (Simon and Schuster), Haizip attacks Highland Beach, the private resort near Annapolis founded a century ago by the family of Frederick Douglass. "It was filled with people who looked too white, East Indian or Native American," she writes. "There were not enough brown faces for my comfort. There was too much talk of color, hair texture and family connections.

On this morning, Haizlip, 57, is talking about her daughters — Deirdre and Melissa, an actress and a lawyer.

"One is light like me, and one is dark like my husband," Haizlip says. "And I'm glad they were not raised in Washington because I think they would have been damaged children. We would have done our best in the home, but there would still have been that problem." For according to Haizip, black Washington is "rigidly stratified by color and class." She has never lived here, but she grew up hearing the tales her par-ents, aunts and nucles told about their bornetown. She describes it as a place topped by "the light and the well-to-do, who strove to protect and replicate them-selves. They practiced pigmentation endogamy. They wallowed in their whitene They flaunted their straight hair, their high noses and thin hos." Perhaps it's because so many blacks in Washington came up from plantations in Virginia, that mother of more presidents than any other state, she offers. Haizlip herself has traced her ancestry back to Martha Dandridge Custis, the wife of George Washington. "So many people who were light-skinned were tied to the American aristocracy," she says. "They felt proud of that, and wanted to keep that separation of

Aside from the color conundrum, however, Haizlip seems to think black Washington's upper crust is laudable. She quotes the historian Carter G. Woodson explaining how African American families began gaining prominence when "a member who accomplished something unusual and others of his descendants lived up to that record by likewise achieving distinction." Haizip adds: "Wealth was not the most important factor in belonging. Education was the key.
With each succeeding generation, the group became more insulated and more secure. They attained education, property, financial security and, most of all, respectability. But they did not completely turn their backs on their darker or less affluent brethren. A good number of them founded or participated in the forerunners of civil rights organizations that were designed to uplift the 'masses' of their people."

Yet these people, or their descendants, she feared, would have damaged her chil-

On second thought, Haizip called back later in the day to ask a reporter to "modi-fy" or "strike" the statement. "Or just simply add my new disclaimer. It sounds as if I'm condemning a whole group of people, and I really don't want to do that. I don't want it to seem as if everyone in any particular group in Washington is a destructive or a bad or a vile person."

Haizin does have emotional cause to lash out at Washington. It was here that her mother - Margaret Morris - and a younger, physically deformed brother were abandoned by their fairer-skinned father, siblings, aunts and uncles, who decided to move west, where they could start new lives and pass for white. Morris, whose mother had died when she was 4, was then shuttled among guardians who ranged from the bi-

"Mother told me that she was not with her father, or her brothers and sister because she was 'too brown,' " Haiziip writes of her earliest efforts to trace her family tree. "No matter how beautiful the autumn. its onset signaled the beginning of a seasonal sadness for my mother. Her melancholy would deepen as Christmas approached. I remember feeling helplessly protective of her as she talked of childhood holiday wish-

Morris's melancholy persisted despite the happy marriage and home life she built in Connecticut. "As my mother approached her 80th birthday, I made a conscious decision to use whatever means possible to find

Haizlin used detectives to track down her mother's last surviving sibling, Grace Mor-ris Cramer, whom she found living alone in trailer park in California, the traces of tan in her face buried under layers of white powder. Haizlip tells the end of her story with a vindictive flourish, noting trium-phantly that her mother now lives in a

When she reunited the two sisters, Haizlip was struck by how much they looked and talked stike. Each also likes cats, each has a daughter named Patricia and a grand-son named Jeffrey. Both are widowed now, after long marriages. Both have hot tempers. They live in worlds that are vastly different, but are similarly color-conscious and prejudiced. One is black, the other white.

Florida Sunshine Boy? Limbough Goes Orange

Fresh as a lemon: Rush Limbanch, the latest pitch man for the Florida Citrus Commission, is leaving a sour taste in some mouths. The rightist radio and TV talk show host, known for bashing feminists and President Clinton, starts his $1 million job with the commission on Monday — the same board that decided Anita Bryant and Burt Reynolds were too controversial to promote orange juice. Governor Lawton Chiles, a Democrat, is not pleased. A spokesman quoted Chiles as saying, "Our orange juice leaves a good taste with people and should be promoted on programs that represent good taste.

Jack Valenti, head of the Motion Pictures Association of America and the U.S. film industry's main lobbyist, called for a reconciliation with the French industry. Speaking at the annual television festival held in Monte Carlo, Valenti told "all my French friends" that both sides should look beyond the trade negotiations last year. Oh, yes, and a word of advice: He said the French could "conquer" the American film market if they invested in U.S. movie house ch

Vicar Dennis Ackroyd tells the Daily Star that on rounds of his Surrey village, south of London, to encourage people to come to church, he "knocked on the door of a particnlarly grand house and a very nice chap answered and said his name was Eric." Noticing a guitar at the house, the vicar asked the resident to play for a service and allowed a couple of months' practice. The man said he could probably do without rehearsal, and shortly afterward Eric Clapton appeared at the church, accompanying hymns.

Emily Schindler, widow of the hero of Steven Splelberg's "Schindler's List," wishes the movie success and says she's getting a cut in the proceeds. Schindler, 86, who lives in a two-room house outside Buenos Aires, declined to say what percentage she had been offered. Her husband, Oskar, died in 1974.
